You Couldn't Get a Copy of the SUNDAY AMERICAN

Last Sunday?

Well, you're not the only one. Thousands of others who applied to their newsdealers too late in the morning also failed to get the AMERICAN.

The fact is that in many parts of Greater Boston the edition was sold out before 9 a. m.

The only way to beat the early risers and to make sure that you get the Buried Treasure story, the Amusement tickets, the only COMIC supplement and all the other good things, is to order your SUNDAY AMERICAN from the newsdealer to-day.

Here are some of the reasons why there will be another great rush for to-morrow's AMERICAN:

1—The Buried Treasure Story—It will contain the clue by which you can find the $5, $10 and $20 gold pieces, and the hundreds of Paragon Park tickets hidden at Nantasket.

2—A photograph of the Girl with the Red Dollar Sign—If you find her at Paragon Park you get $50.

3—Free passes to amusement places—worth $1.95, as follows:

4—The last winners in the Baby Show—The Baby Beauty Contest closes to-morrow. The winners of the $500 and $100 prizes will be announced in two or three weeks.

The brightest baby in Greater Boston is also going to get a $500 bouquet about the same time. We haven't counted the babies that have been entered in these contests, but the total is somewhere in the vicinity of eight thousand. Think of them—eight thousand babies in a contest of beauty and brightness! Wouldn't you like to see them all together in one building?

Think it over now. Don't enter too quickly.

5—The only COMIC Supplement—We said it before. We repeat it.—If you have any laugh in you, you know it's true. If you haven't any laugh in you—well, in that case, there's no use trying to sell you an up-to-date newspaper, anyhow. What you need is a liver pill and some exercise.

6—A real newspaper—with the emphasis on news—This may come last, but don't think for a minute that anybody at 80 Summer street considers it least. The Sunday editor doesn't think so. He has been busy all the week violating the anti-monopoly laws until now he thinks he has a Sunday news trust formed that will make Mellen's railroad merger look like a merry-go-round.

For instance:

THE CONFESSIONS OF A POLITICAL BOSS. He is a real boss, too—none of the imitation. Ward 17, kind—and he's let the cat out of the political bag. Whew! What a scurrying of rats there's going to be!

Here's another for the pole.

LODGE—PROCTOR—Guess we better not tell you about it to-day, though—it might bust the news trust.

GIANT TRUST-BUILDER FOUND GUILTY (that's not the Sunday editor). He's one of the best known men in the United States. We're under promise to the United States Government not to let you know anything about it to-day, but if you get the AMERICAN to-morrow you'll find out about it all right to-morrow.

A STIRRING NEW NOVEL, "The Millionaire Girl." Also the continuation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's great story, "The Prince of Sinners." The facts about the awful slaughter of workers. Vanderbilt in a row. The romantic story of Rex Beach's literary courtship. What men are wearing in London. How a great lady is playing gipsy.

All of this and more in one 5-cent Sunday Paper

MARY BRENNAN'S OWN STORY OF MYSTERIOUS BURNAP TRAGEDY

"I DECIDED TO TELL THE TRUTH"

Snapshot of pretty Mary Brennan, who tells her own story of Burnap tragedy for first time.

B. & M. AT MERCY OF NEW HAVEN

120,000 Shares of Northern Road Bought Before Action in Legislature.

DEAL OF $12,000,000 MADE

NEW HAVEN, Ct., July 13.—On high railroad authority it can be stated that the holdings of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company in the Boston & Maine, amounting to approximately 120,000 shares, now represent an absolutely completed transaction.

The shares, it is understood, are held by trustees or other representatives of the New Haven company, and no fair or worthy power exists to vested in those representatives who will draw the Boston & Maine dividend. Stock of the New York, New Haven & Hartford company, of $12,000,000, has been issued to the former Boston & Maine stockholders.

The whole of the 120,000 shares of Boston & Maine stock was acquired previous to the passage of the anti-merger law in Massachusetts and none has been acquired since.

Talks with railroad officials here indicate their conviction that the anti-merger law is unconstitutional on several grounds, notably its interference with the rights of the Boston & Maine shareholders in other States than Massachusetts, and also its bearings upon actual or possible legislation in New Hampshire, where the Boston & Maine is incorporated as well as in the former State. The officers of the New Haven corporation, it is [illegible], have definitely decided to submit at all points to the anti-merger law, leaving the matter to be adjusted at the next session of the Massachusetts Legislature.

GARRETT DEFIES FEDERAL RULING

WASHINGTON, July 13.—"Can I be stopped? I know of only one way, and that is for Major Spencer Cosby to send a regiment of soldiers out on the conduit road to Glen Echo and shoot me off the map. Injunctions have failed." This is the reply that Mayor Garrett buried at the legal opinion of Attorney-General Bonaparte, who asserted that Mayor Garrett and Marshall Collins were not any longer keepers of the peace on the district road, but that the United States Government was the custodian of subwardens, ministers, other foreign and American citizens.

FARM HELP SCARCE.

PORTLAND, Me., July 13.—Farm help throughout the State is extremely scarce. Farmers are offering $2 per day but are securing but little relief. The outlook for the [illegible] crop is good.

Girl Reveals Pathetic History, Left an Orphan and Forced to Face the World Unshielded.

WORCESTER, July 13.—In an exclusive interview with the BOSTON AMERICAN, Miss Mary Brennan, arrested for the killing of Charles L. Burnap, and later released in $1,000 bail, to-day tells why she, although wholly innocent, took the blame on herself for a time to save the crime being placed at the door of Frank Kelly, a special police officer who had been kind to her.

The story of this girl's sacrifice in connection with the slaying of Burnap, for which Frank W. Phipps was to-day held on a charge of murder, is one of the remarkable phases of this mysterious tragedy.

Girl Overheard a Plot

Miss Brennan declares that she distinctly overheard a plan to have the killing charged to Kelly. She knew Kelly to be innocent. She said that it would be better for her to suffer than Kelly because she is an orphan, and he has a father and mother to consider.

Miss Brennan is twenty-one years of age. She is dainty and attractive. She is blue-eyed and fair and has dark, luxuriant hair. Her teeth are even and very white, her voice low and musical, and she is regarded as quite witty.

This is her story of the tragedy of the Lily Pond House:

For Long Years an Orphan.

"I am an orphan. My parents died when I was nine years old. I had some schooling with the Sisters in Worcester. Worcester, you know, has been my home all my life.

"I have known Kelly since I was eleven years old. I have not always seen him, but I always liked him. I have worked at different places. It was two weeks ago that I came here.

"The second day I was here Kelly came to the house. He is a police officer, and it was his duty to come around and see if they were selling liquor. I was surprised and glad when I saw him. He was surprised. He asked me what I was doing at the house. I told him working. Then he told me what kind of a place it was, and that I must get out of it at once.

Wanted to Escape Place.

"I told him I wanted to leave, but did not know what I would do. He said he would get me a position. He showed he was trying to help me for he took me to Mrs. Burns in Shrewsbury, and I thought I was going to work for her. But I didn't get the place.

"Tuesday night he came over and took me out for a drive to get me away from the place and to talk over my future and a new place for me.

"We got back to the house and sat in the parlor. We had been there a short time when Phipps, Mrs. Fyne, Raymond and George Moore came over from the Edgemere.

Heard Tapping at Window.

"Later I heard rapping on the window. Then I heard Phipps talking in the kitchen. The next I knew trouble was brewing. I went out of the house by that door pointing to the rear one. I heard shots and walked on this side of the house (pointing to the one opposite to the place from where the shots are alleged to have been fired).

"Then I went to the other side of the house. Still shots were fired. I did not

RUSSIAN PEASANTS' REVOLT IS GROWING

CZAR FEARS THAT A GENERAL REVOLUTION IS IMMINENTLY NEAR.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 13.—Agrarian revolts, more serious than any which have yet occurred, have broken out again throughout Russia. Troops are on the move in all the provinces. The peasants have burned estates, destroyed cattle, and forced rich land owners to flee for their lives. In encounters between the revolutionary peasants and the troops the latter have suffered severely.

The province of Kherson, bordering on the Black Sea, is in a state of revolt. Odessa, the chief city of the province is filled with troops. There are Russian warships in the harbor of Odessa, but the crews of those vessels cannot be relied upon in case of a general uprising. Many of them have taken part in previous mutinies, and would, it is feared, join the revolutionists.

The whole countryside is practically under military rule, but the presence of soldiery to a revolution which shall sweep the empire. The revolutionary leaders have been planning their final coup with great care. One of their plans has been to encourage uprisings in the rural districts, in order to divert as many troops as possible from the great centres of population.

Moscow, Odessa, St. Petersburg and the other principal cities of Russia will be the scene of the final uprising. The military authorities believe that this is imminent and have taken every precaution to crush it. There is disaffection among the troops, however, the propaganda of revolution having been spread extensively throughout the army. The Czar regards the situation with great apprehension.

The military bands have been summoned to Peterhof to take consul. The guards around the Czar have been doubled and every precaution is being taken to prevent an attempt on his life. Such an attempt, even if it were unsuccessful, would, it is feared, precipitate a crisis.

SCHOONER CUT DOWN 3 PERISH

Fishermen Hurled Into Sea As Vessel Sinks Before Prow of White Star Liner.

15 PICKED UP BY ROMANIC

NEW YORK, July 13.—In a dense fog that blanketed the entire ocean like a pall, the little fishing schooner Nathalie B. Nickerson, sailing from Boothbay Harbor, Me., was run down by the big White Star liner Romanic off Nantucket Lightship yesterday and three of the fishermen's crew drowned. Fifteen other members of the schooner's crew saved their lives by jumping overboard as the vessel, which was fast going to pieces, some swimming to a dory which launched just before the schooner went down and others clinging to floating wreckage until picked up. The drowned men are believed to be William Winchester, of Digby, N. S., and Everett and Elwell Greenlief, of Southern, of Maine.

The schooner crumbled like a pasteboard toy before the impact of the liner. Hurled from their bunks, the fishermen found themselves all at once in the swirling water, and naught but fog all about, fog that clung to them like shreds of a suffocating blanket and dotted out their fellows, struggling in the water.

Sinks in One Minute.

One short minute after the sharp steel bow of the liner had stabbed the little schooner, there was a careening of the hull of the Nickerson, a short, sharp gurgle and down she went in twenty-seven fathoms of water.

The Romanic hovered about the spot for two hours after the collision. The last man rescued from the wreckage was Bert Wylie, a one-armed fisherman, from Maine, who was found clinging to a piece of debris.

Of the survivors none are to-day reported the worse for their experience, except Captain Seavey of Boothbay Harbor, who is slightly delirious as a result of the shock.

The Natalie Nickerson sailed from Newport, R. I., July 5 for the Nantucket Shoals. The fishing was good, and yesterday, when the weather began to set in thick, Captain Seavey and his men were in high spirits over the good catch.

The Romanic left Queens for this city at noon Thursday to make a special trip out of New York. Off the Nantucket Light an easterly wind blew in a nasty mist, and as the big White Star liner neared the Nantucket Shoals an impenetrable fog bank shut in. Captain Haddock, realizing the danger of running down the fleet of fishermen, reduced the speed of the ship.

Fishermen Asleep in Bunks.

Fifteen of the Nickerson's crew were asleep below when the men on watch saw the Romanic bearing down upon them. They ran below to rouse the sleeping fishermen, but before the men could tumble out of their bunks the Romanic crashed into the after quarter of the Nickerson, which was moving lazily along with forefall and mainsail drawing.

The crew, half dressed, rushed to the deck, and managed to get overboard in dory. Hardly had this been done than the Nickerson sank and several of the crew were drawn down beneath the waters by the suction. A few men managed to reach the dory, while others seized bits of floating wreckage.

Boats were quickly lowered from the Romanic. One by one the fishermen who could be located were picked up.

The surviving fisherman were sent back to Boston to-day.

MYSTERY IN WOMEN'S WAR OVER GYPSY MUSICIAN

The upper picture shows the present Mrs. Rigo, who, is the divorced wife of Caspar Emersan, and who says that machinations are on foot to separate her from her husband. She asked the aid of New York police to locate and arrest a mysterious "Mrs. Marin." The lower photograph shows the Princess Chimay, who cast aside husband, position and honor for the gypsy's love, and Rigo, the dark-faced violinist, who declares he will be true to his wife.

M'GRAW FACES MURDER TRIAL

A special venire of 100 men has been summoned to the Superior Criminal Court Monday morning, when Robert McGraw will face trial, charged with murder in the first degree of Benjamin Farwell on the night of April 25, 1906, in the works of the American Steam Gauge and Valve Company. Judge Fessenden, together with Judge White, will preside at the trial, which will in all probability last nearly all this week.

Although the murder occurred over two years ago, McGraw has not been confined in jail all since then, as he was not indicted until last February. The police dropped the investigation shortly after the murder, but evidence was secured by Mrs. Isabell F. Farwell, which was presented to the Grand Jury, and a bill followed.

KOREA FEARS JAPS WRATH

SEOUL, Korea, July 13.—A state of panic prevails in the palace. Reports from Japan showing the active agitation for the dethronement of the Korean Emperor on account of his part in The Hague affair have caused a great sensation.

Among Koreans the Emperor is reported as being greatly depressed. The regular weekly cabinet meeting was not held, the Emperor reporting himself ill.

Efforts on the part of the Koreans to get some indication of Japanese policy from Marquis Ito, long the right hand of the dictator, declaring that the Tokio government must decide.

REIDS TIRE OF EMBASSY POMP

LONDON, July 13.—Ambassador Whitelaw Reid is reported to be planning to retire from his post, the cost of entertaining on the scale that he has set proving to be too much of a drain even on his immense fortune.

The Reids are believed to have come to the conclusion that the game is "not worth the candle," while the physical strain is killing. Instead of making friends, lavish hospitalities have only bred envy and enmities. Mr. Reid is now thoroughly tired, and is cutting down his social engagements to the utmost.

MAN'S WORD SENDS WHEAT SOARING HIGH

By Boston American Leased Wire.

CHICAGO, July 13.—One man's unsupported word sent the price of wheat bounding upward to-day in every grain mart of the country, with an accompanying profit or loss of millions of dollars to speculators.

James A. Patten, millionaire member of the Board of Trade, was the man. "Truth-ful Jim" is another appellation by which he is known. Several hundred traders, after a glance at a telegram from Mr. Patten, rushed into the market, and by frantic buying started a "bull market" that sent the price of wheat soaring two cents in a half hour. Patten is in the Northwest studying conditions and the crop.

A. A. Sprague, acting for the firm of which he is a member was posted on the bulletin board in Mr. Patten declared all the wheat he had seen was in a deplorable condition. It had more effect than a government report. Pandemonium broke loose and wheat went up with a bound.

BOY FROM GRANITE STATE DROWNED

ANNAPOLIS, Md., July 13.—Midshipman H. C. Palmer, of the new fourth class at the naval academy, who entered the institute Monday morning, was drowned off old Fort Madison, across the Severn River from the academy yesterday. His home was in Manchester, N. H., where his widowed mother now lives. The body has not been recovered.

PHILADELPHIA GREETS ELKS.

PHILADELPHIA, July 13.—The great majority of the host of Elks reached Philadelphia in time to spend a day in sightseeing before the formal opening of the convention on Monday. The quarters in the hotels reserved for the visitors are being occupied as every train comes into the city.

RIGO SPURNS LOVE OF PRINCESS CHIMAY

NEW YORK, July 13.—The New York police were enlisted to-day in the war of women that is raging over the affections of Rigo, the gypsy fiddler.

Princess Catherine Rigo, the beautiful wife of the musician; Princess Chimay, who a few years ago scandalized Europe by casting aside her husband for the love of the fiddler, and a mysterious "Mrs. Marin," whose identity is not yet clear, are the central figures in the battle over the dark-faced violinist.

Rigo declares that, in spite of the machinations of other women, he will remain loyal to his wife.

Asks Aid of Police.

After asking the police to-day to locate and arrest a "Mrs. Marin" Mrs. Rigo said that she will do her utmost to keep other women away from her husband.

"My mother writes me that the princess in her anxiety to get me back has put a tombstone over my father's grave and has ordered money in my little village," said Rigo to-day. "She has sent me $1,000 which I have returned to her.

"The Princess changes the color of her hair too often for me to call her anyway. She had golden hair when I first met her. Now my mother writes me that it is black."

Rigo's remarkable interview which she gave out Friday, Mrs. Rigo went so far as to say that not only is the Princess Chimay making frantic efforts to win back the affections of Rigo, but that there are reasons for believing that the Princess is actually in New York preparing to engage in her campaign. Rigo himself took part in the interview, modestly admitted that the Princess still loves him and is eager to win back his affections.

Rigo Won't Be Wooed.

But Mrs. Rigo need have no fears on that score. The Princess will not succeed. Rigo says so himself and not for all Ward millions would he again admit the Princess Chimay to his heart.

But in the determination of the Princess to attach herself once more to Rigo, then there is something else on foot, says Mrs. Rigo, for the mysterious Mrs. Martin has been very active on the trial of Mrs. Rigo for a long while, and there are dark hints about darker plans to secure the $20,000,000 trust estate which will be inherited by the Princess Chimay's heirs, that Mrs. Rigo thinks may bear fruit in the dim future.

Incidentally Mrs. Rigo is the divorced wife of Caspar Emerson, a well known organ, and it may also be only incidental that Rigo and his wife are now appearing in public for the first time since the fullness of Rigo's success in Cuba. Mrs. Emerson kindly consented to see a representative of the BOSTON AMERICAN, and to him she gave some of the machinations of her mysterious Mrs. Martin and also of the Princess Chimay's efforts to win back Rigo.

"My cousin, the Princess Chimay," she said, "may be in New York. But it is certain they her presence and her efforts will avail nothing. Rigo is mine by every law of man and love. He has forsworn the love of Princess Chimay for nine long, enduring, consuming and lifelong years. He has lived in fear of death ever since my sister, Elsa, 'Duchess' Cleveland, arrange men have followed me about, and since two years ago I began to observe that a very handsome woman looked more fifty years happened to appear in every place that I visited."

Woman's Actions Sinister.

The mysterious Mrs. Martin.

Detailing how Mrs. Martin followed her about, Mrs. Rigo imparted the information that this woman, whom she holds in mistrust, recently had several interviews with Rigo, who, in fact, introduced Mrs. Martin to his wife one day in a restaurant. It was this interview that brought about one of the startling climaxes.

"What I cannot understand," said Rigo, "is that Mrs. Martin should attempt to break up her campaign. Rigo himself took part in the interview, modestly admitted that the Princess still loves him and is eager to win back his affections.

Rigo Won't Be Wooed.

But Mrs. Rigo need have no fears on that score. The Princess will not succeed. Rigo says so himself and not for all Ward millions would he again admit the Princess Chimay to his heart.

But in the determination of the Princess to attach herself once more to Rigo, then there is something else on foot, says Mrs. Rigo, for the mysterious Mrs. Martin has been very active on the trial of Mrs. Rigo see anyone about. In the meantime Kelly saw that matters were getting hot. He left me at once, and I believed that he was getting away because he was a police officer. But I also thought that he might have gone down there. But later I changed my mind.

MARY BRENNAN TELLS OWN STORY OF TRAGEDY

Deserted Wife of the Accused Man Declares Belief in His Innocence.

Did Not Know of Tragedy.

"I did not know anyone had been shot until 3 o'clock the next day, when the body was found. I had not seen Kelly from the time he left me Tuesday night until he saw me in jail.

"The first I thought of murder being done was when I heard Phipps and Mrs. Pyne in that room talking. I distinctly heard them say that they would put the shooting on to Kelly. They said that he was a police officer and naturally carried a gun. Phipps said he could get out of it by getting up a story that there had been a fight and that Kelly proffered because it was his duty and that therefore he would not be held to anyone.

"I'll tell you my mind then. I was determined that Kelly should not be arrested. He had been so good to me. He is a good fellow and the best friend I have.

"I was so worried. Kelly has a good home, a pretty wife and father and mother. Everyone thinks well of him. Now wouldn't any girl have stood up for so good a fellow?

"I have no parents and nothing to sacrifice for myself. So when the officer came to me, I told them I shot Burnap. They arrested me. But they did treat me nicely. They didn't put any handcuffs on me. I suppose that was because they saw I was willing to come along.

"Into jail I went, and I made all preparations for never being free again. I knew I cried, but it was foolish. But then, I suppose that was because I was a woman. I meant to step right up and take things as they came. But I had to cry, and am sorry for it. I wanted to get out.

"Then you can imagine my surprise when the policemen came with Kelly. He told me his story. Then I found I was on the wrong track.

Would Tell Everything.

"I made up my mind at once. I would tell everything I knew. I had nothing to gain by shielding a man who would have ruined me for life. So I told about Phipps going to lay it on Kelly. I told the police the truth, even if I did not get it all out at once.

"You know people in Phipps's business have no use for a quitter. It is generally hard to get away from what they say.

"Well, the next move was when the police came to me in my cell and said: 'Mary, you know this place.' I didn't know what they meant. I knew I could not be let go unless the judge said so. But they told the District Attorney had made arrangements for my release, but I was to appear in court on Monday.

"I was never so happy in all my life. It would have been terrible to have stayed in jail forever. But I would have done so to save Kelly.

"I am going in Worcester to stay with a friend on Austin street. I will rest until I am wanted in court."

PHIPPS ENTERS PLEA OF "NOT GUILTY"

WORCESTER, July 13.—Looking very much depressed and with all his careless air of yesterday gone, Frank W. Phipps, proprietor of the Lily Pond House, on the Shrewsbury side of Lake Quinsigamond, was to-day arraigned in the First District Court in this city and charged with the murder of Charles L. Burnap.

Phipps pleaded not guilty. Judge Utley held Phipps without bail for a hearing on Tuesday. The case of Miss Mary Brennan, who was ordered to appear in court on the same crime and released under $1,000 bail, was also put over until Tuesday.

Owing to the importance of the case to that while it is expected that Miss Brennan will be called as one of the chief witnesses to prove that Phipps fired the shot that pierced Burnap's heart, the same array of lawyers represents both Phipps and Miss Brennan. For Phipps is counsel of David O'Connell and John E. Sullivan.

Phipps was brought from his police station cell to the court room shortly after 9 o'clock to-day. There were three other prisoners arraigned with him. The face of the real estate and former lawyer was drawn and marked with mental pain and he looked a picture of misery and anguish. Not many of his friends were in court.

The voice of Court Clerk Simpson rang out sharply:

"Frank W. Phipps."

Called to Plead.

The prisoner arose and uttered an inarticulate word. He quickly rose to his feet and hurried to the bar. He rested his hands on the railing and looked straight into the face of the judge.

"You are accused of murder—how do you plead?" asked the clerk in quickly spoken words.

"Not guilty."

There was a ring in the man's voice and for the first time in the long-drawn saga of his life Lawyer O'Connell stood beside him.

"We have agreed to a continuance of the case until Tuesday," said O'Connell, addressing the judge.

"The other case (Miss Brennan) comes up Monday," said the Judge.

"We have arranged with District Attorney Taft to have both cases come up Tuesday," said Mr. O'Connell.

"All right," said the Judge. "I'll hold Phipps without bail."

WIFE DECLARES PHIPPS INNOCENT OF MURDER CHARGE

ATTLEBORO, July 13.—Mrs. Frank W. Phipps, wife of the man arrested at Worcester for the killing of Charles L. Burnap, lives in this city. She wept when she heard of the trouble in which her recreant husband is entangled, and declared that she did not believe that he had killed the man.

Mrs. Phipps was once the belle of Milford and she is still a very beautiful woman. She was found at No. 109 Bank street, where she lives with her sister, Mrs. F. G. Middleton. Mr. Middleton is a fireman.

Mrs. Phipps left home by her husband in Milford in December, 1904. He became infatuated with Mrs. Josephine Pyne. That has caused all our trouble, Mrs. Pyne finally left her husband and came here. She is the woman who has been acting as housekeeper for my husband."

"I want to say that I do not think that my husband is guilty of the crime with which he is charged. I would stake my life on it that he never shot anyone intentionally. Whatever else he may have done he is not the kind of a man to do such a violent act.

"When I left my husband I took half of the property and came here to live. I brought with me a picture of my husband, but later sent it back to him.

"I shall not go near him. I told him when I began to live apart from him forever and I propose to keep my word. I blame the other woman—that is natural under the circumstances."

Mrs. Phipps and her children are highly thought of here. Her daughter, Eva, is employed as a stenographer in one of the corset factories in this city. Her son, Amos, is also employed by a jeweler.

Mrs. Josephine Pyne, a former husband is living in Holliston. She has a sister, Mrs. Pringle, who lives on Spruce street, in Milford.

LIPTON SAYS HE'LL BUILD A SHAMROCK IV.

By Viola Rodgers.
Special Correspondent of the Boston American.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, July 13.—When I asked Sir Thomas Lipton if he will intended to enter another race for the America Cup, he said:

"As long as I am standing in shoe leather I will hope to win the cup.

"I know I will win next time, for it will be Shamrock the Fourth, and the fourth always has been my lucky number, you know."

He was glad to see Mr. Croker win the Derby. That was a splendid victory, and it proved that a horse trained outside of Newmarket could win a few things. It was an Irish horse and an Irish American owner; the jockey, Ivy. And so, of course, I hope that an Irishman's boat will at last win the Atlantic Derby.

There Will Be a Shamrock IV.

"I have not yet sent my challenge to the New York Yacht Club, for the time for challenges is not due for 1908, nor does not expire until October, and I don't know that it would be good policy to give my friends the enemy, too much time; but there will be a Shamrock IV. And so, of course, I hope that an Irishman's boat will at last win the Atlantic Derby.

"When I called at the big offices of Sir Thomas and Lady Lipton I decided that the genial titled yachtsman was giving his friends a rousing welcome. For how could one account for the fact that the long rows of desks and the tables were covered with cups. Thomas sat were stacked up with cakes and other eatables while the men of the firm crowded in to see their friends.

Every clerk in that great light room looked happy. Everybody was busy with one another, while the girl typewriters forgot their machines or rose to greet us as if they were hostesses at a garden party.

Lipton's private office, near the general office, and, lo and behold, he was eonfortably installed in one of a long table nearly covered with a white tablecloth, on which was spread some nice, savoury refreshments. I asked as Sir Thomas heartily arose and gave me a hearty welcome.

Lieutenant General Nelson A. Miles made public to-day the route of the civic and trades parade for Old Home Week, July 31. It will take about two hours to reach the point where it ends out. The Governor will review the parades at the State House, the Mayor at City Hall, and the Hon. Lieutenant General Miles, at the corner of Beacon and Charles streets. At this point the paraders will march on to the parade ground of the Common and there receive their rations.

The entries for the parade are as follows: Grand Army of the Republic, Sons of Veterans, Ninth Regiment Veteran Association, Company L, Ninth Regiment, N. Y. N. G., Hearts of Oak Lodge, Sons of St. George; Boston Commandery No. 2, Caledonian Club, Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters, Ancient and Honorable Artillery, Fusilier Veteran Association, British Naval and Military Association, Veteran Firemen's Association, John Boyle O'Reilly Cadets, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Letter Carriers' Association.

About 10,000 men are expected to be in line.

The procession will leave the junction of Commonwealth avenue and Arlington street at 11 a. m. sharp and go over the following route:

Arlington street, Beacon street, Charles street, Park Square, Columbus avenue, Berkeley street, Tremont street, Boylston street, Washington street, Summer street, Kneeland street, Albany street, Mills street, Broad street, State street, Devonshire street, Washington street, Hanover street, Tremont Row, Tremont street, Boylston street, Park Square.

Lloyd's Eyeglasses and Spectacles

It is impossible to make glasses right; to have them sit properly; to be comfortable, useful and becoming, without a large equipment, a reliable force of trained mechanics and clerks; a stock of frames of many styles, sizes and materials and comfortable accommodations for customers. The advantages we offer are very real, and should be carefully borne in mind by those about to get their first glasses.

HAYWOOD FEARS NO QUESTION

Even Counsel for State Admit Mine Leader Is a Remarkable Witness.

GIVES ORCHARD THE LIE

By J. S. Dunnigan.

BOISE, Ida., July 13.—Both the State and the defense closed to-day that Wm. Haywood was a splendid witness in his own behalf, though he underwent a most severe and searching cross-examination.

Senator Borah was thorough in his work and at all times fair and square with the defendant. Once, when Clarence S. Darrow and Richardson thought they ought to object, Haywood informed his attorneys he would answer any question the Senator might ask.

In defining his feelings toward former Governor Frank Steunenberg, Governor Peabody of Colorado, Sherman Bell, Judges Goddard and Gabbert, and Frank J. Hearne of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, all of whom were marked for assassination, according to Orchard, Haywood said he regarded each as a representative of corporations that had corrupted the politics of the States. Borah objected questions along this line and insisted on direct answers.

"I will answer you frankly, Senator," said Haywood, "and you must not understand me as expressing enmity toward those men personally."

"I regarded them as part of an administration that was under the absolute control of corporations in Colorado."

Denies Orchard Stories.

Haywood was as emphatic in denying Orchard's versions of conversations and meetings that occurred in Denver when Haywood, Moyer, Pettibone, Orchard, Adams, Simpkins and others met in headquarters or somewhere else. Haywood did not hide meetings with Orchard when the latter lived in Pettibone's house in the Summer of 1905, when Mrs. Pettibone was away from home. Haywood lived directly across the street and said he frequently saw Orchard out and talked with him.

There is one admission by Haywood that is sure to be used against him in argument, but his lawyers say the defendant's explanation of the incident ought to count in his favor.

Concerning the sending of $75 to Steve Adams, who was arrested in Ogden, Haywood said he sent the money on telegraphic request, though he had never seen Steve Adams but once before and had only known him then about a month or six weeks.

He declared that several weeks before this occurred Adams and a couple of partners called to see him and told how they were going to Tonopah. Adams told Haywood that if they found any good prospects they would locate him. This was an usual promise on the part of miners, said Haywood, and he felt the men would have kept their word if they had had any luck.

Haywood deniied that he ever was in Orchard's room in the Belmont, that he ever discussed with Orchard the construction of any crime. He emphasized his denials that he had ever paid, directly or indirectly, any money either of his own or the organization's to Orchard. He declared that if Orchard ever received any money from the Federation it was for relief, to which he was entitled as an exile from Cripple Creek.

Knew Jack Simpkins.

The defendant said he was aware that Orchard, Adams, Davis and others changed their names after the Cripple Creek deportation and read in the Denver papers that Orchard and Adams were suspected of blowing up the Independence Depot, which killed fourteen non-union men. He believed these men changed their names because nearly every member of the federation was charged with crimes in Cripple Creek.

Haywood said he knew Jack Simpkins, the fugitive, well. He was a member of the executive board.

"He was a very active member, was he not?" asked Borah.

"No, he was not," Haywood responded; "he gave less attention to his work than any other member of the board."

Haywood explained that the $100 remittance to Jack Simpkins from Nov. 21, 1905, was a personal transaction, and he never informed Pettibone or any one else that he had sent money to Simpkins.

THAW'S WIFE DEVOTED TO HARRY IN CELL

Goes Daily, with Loving Sacrifice, to Visit Him in the Tombs.

HUSBAND SEEMS GRATEFUL

By Charles Somerville.

NEW YORK, July 13.—The devotion of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw to her husband, which found her a visitor every day before his trial for the murder of Stanford White, appears not to have been the stage devotion that it was at the time in cynical quarters regarded as being.

The fame of this devotion did not die nor has it even dwindled since the public eye has been turned away from the young millionaire prisoner in the Tombs and the girlish wife for love of whom he was moved to strike down Stanford White, the great architect.

After the failure of the jury at the first trial to reach a verdict, Thaw settled back into his old regular life at the Tombs. And the feature of it that saw his young wife pass through the big iron gates of the prison every day on which visitors were allowed did not change.

Winter passed into Spring and Spring into hot Summer, but young Thaw's wife has faithfully remained in the city. Her whole demeanor has been contradictory of those assertions which pictured her as a silly, vain lover of notoriety. Prophets had declared that she would sooner or later commit some sensational act to bring herself back into the public light.

In justice to her it must be said that she has done everything possible to allow the public to forget her, her tragic story and its terrible sequel that happened something more than a year ago.

She even shrank from the curious glances that followed her now and then in the corridor of the Hotel Lorraine. She very quietly went from there to the little house in Park avenue, and there she has lived quite alone with two servants, receiving but one or two visitors, and these always in connection with her husband's interests, in the trial that is set for October.

Mother and Wife Friendly.

She has allowed to pass uncontradicted various rumors that were printed from time to time declaring that she and Harry Thaw's mother had become hopelessly estranged. As a matter of fact, I know that no such estrangement ever existed. It would be queer if old Mrs. Thaw could ever be ungrateful to the girl who fought so splendidly in her son's behalf. Harry Thaw's mother has been quite as devoted as ingratitude. She has several times visited New York since the trial for the purpose of consulting her son and her son's chief counsel, Daniel O'Reilly. She has always stayed while in town as the guest of young Mrs. Thaw in the Park avenue house.

Meanwhile the girl-wife has never failed to pay her daily visit to her husband. This she has done always as unostentatiously as possible. If the weather is pleasant she has been in the habit of dismissing her auto-hansom a block away from the prison so that the arrival of the carriage at the prison gates should not draw a crowd. Similarly she has left the prison when her visit was done.

The elder Mrs. Thaw is in the city now and she said the girl have daily visited Thaw together and all that of late with the most wide dispersed by the manner in which they come and go from the prison with the white haired woman's hand on the slender arm of the girl, who of the two women, bereved bravest during the anxious days of the long trial that came to nothing.

Thaw Deeply Touched.

Thaw himself has been most deeply touched by his wife's steady devotion, as may be imagined. Time and again he has told Lawyer O'Reilly that these visits alone made prison life tolerable. When, once or twice, it has been printed in the newspapers that young Mrs. Thaw had missed a day at the Tombs, Thaw has been indignant. Anything which would rob this little woman of any credit that is her due, always. Thaw seriously, even in so little a matter as this, is going to issue a statement in which he declares when it was reported his wife had not visited him at the Tombs, it was due to the fact that his wife made her visit in the afternoon instead of the morning, as is her custom. Reporters noting that she had not arrived at the usual hour decided that she was not coming at all and so erroneously reported her as having absented herself.

"There have been 110 days this year on which visitors were allowed to call on people here, said Thaw. "My wife has missed only one of these 110 days, and that day she went to Long Beach at my especial request to spend the day with the wife of Daniel O'Reilly, my counsel."

MYSTERY IN $20,000 THEFT OF DIAMONDS

NEW YORK, July 13.—Pinkerton detectives are attempting to solve the mystery of a $20,000 jewel robbery from the private safe in the offices of J. M. Cebellos & Company, bankers and brokers, who failed not long ago for something like $4,000,000.

For more than a week rumors of the theft have been current in Wall street, but the strictest precautions against leaks have been instructed to deny all knowledge of the case.

From Mr. Cebellos himself confirmation of the theft was obtained last night, and also from William V. Howe, the assignee of the firm in bankruptcy. It is said that in view of the fact that the property was personal and not a part of the firm's assets he had given himself no concern over the loss. Mr. Cebellos said the matter was largely of a personal nature which he was averse to discussing.

Several Have Access to Safe.

The stones were the property of Mr. Cebellos himself and by him were kept in the suite of offices which the firm leased and the safe was still occupied at No. 52 William street. Several had access to the safe, but only one or two knew the combination. Mr. Cebellos had the key to the private compartment.

LYING ON TRACKS, HAS LEG CUT OFF

FITCHBURG, July 13.—George R. Morse, residing at West Fitchburg, was run over last night at Wachusett Station by a Fitchburg bound electric car, crushing his right leg. He was lying on the tracks. He was carried to Burbank Hospital, where his foot was amputated.

BATTLESHIPS WORTHLESS, SAYS EXPERT

WASHINGTON, July 13.—An editorial attack on the construction of the battleships of the United States navy, in the July issue of the Navy, a service paper in which several of the highest naval officers are interested as stockholders, practically charges that the battleship Kearsarge and Kentucky have faults of construction which render them worthless.

One of the charges is that the big turret guns are so exposed that they could be wrecked by a one-pounder rapid fire gun.

The editorial says that the Kearsarge will be anchored off Philadelphia next week and invites the public to make an inspection. It then says:

"If the Kearsarge and Kentucky had been designed according to the best ideas of practice current at that time, it seems hardly likely that the officers who took them to Europe soon after their completion would have been grossly ashamed of the ships of which they had command; but alas, they were ashamed.

TWAIN SAILS FOR AMERICA

LONDON, July 13.—Mark Twain sails to-day on the steamship Minnetonka for New York. He spent the last day of his visit to England quietly. In the morning he went over the National Gallery under the guidance of the director, Sir Charles Holroyd, and after lunching with friends, returned to his rooms. Many called to bid him farewell.

In an interview Mr. Clemens said: "I have lived a splendidly generous, energetic life here for four weeks, but I have felt no failure and have had little desire to quiet down. I am younger now by seven years than I was, and if I could stay here another month I could make it fourteen.

"For two years past I have been planning my funeral, but I have changed my mind now and have postponed it."

GIVE UP WALKER SEARCH.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., July 13.—The New Britain Savings Bank officials have abandoned the search for Treasurer William Walker, the $100,000 defaulter, declaring there is no clue.

PRINCE LOST; ACTRESS SAYS SHE IS HIS WIFE

NEW YORK, July 13.—Prince Victor of Thurn and Taxis, nephew of the late Empress of Austria, friend of the Vanderbilts, Goulds, Gerrys and other prominent New York families, was reported as missing last night in New York by a beautiful young woman, who asserts that she was secretly married to him last October.

If he she has claimed, she was really married to the Prince, the fact will come as a great surprise, for the social match makers had concluded that the young Prince would seek his romance within the royal circle.

"Mrs. Taxis," as she says the Prince told her to call herself, until they returned to Austria and he introduced her as the Princess, lives in luxurious apartments at No. 480 Park avenue. She declares that her royal husband suddenly left her about six weeks ago after a slight quarrel and she fears that some misfortune may have befallen him.

The Princess of Park avenue says that she is poor. She was Miss Josephine West and lived in Jacksonville, Florida, until she went upon the vaudeville stage.

She is rarely years of age, slender, with small regular features, large, dark eyes and a profusion of chestnut hair. She declares her belief that there is a plot in which several persons are engaged to keep the Prince hidden from her until she will consent to give him up.

The Prince came to America a year ago last April. He brought letters of introduction to some of the most socially prominent families in this country, and announced that he expected to make an extended visit in America, and that he might engage in business here if his family consented.

REED SLAYER NOW PLEADING SELF-DEFENCE

Man Who Shot Youth in Quarrel Over Cat, Says Life in Danger.

CAUGHT BY THE POLICE

Sister Had Warned Reed of His Danger

I HAD urged Charlie to stay in the house. I knew that the Italian family next door were in an ugly mood. Mrs. Angelo had threatened me because I told her that their cat must be kept in the house and not allowed to get at our chickens. Charlie did not heed my warning. Just as he stepped toward the henhouse I heard the shot and rushed to him in time to catch him before he fell.—Helen V. Reed's story of the killing of her brother, Charles J. Reed.

Found hiding at the home of his sweetheart by the police, Gaiespil Zeccola, arrested on the charge of killing Charles J. Reed at Watertown last night, confessed to the slaying, but said that he had done it in defence of himself and his sister, Mrs. Angelo, neighbor of the Reed family.

Zeccola was taken to the Waltham district court, and at the request of District Attorney Banfordt and Chief of Police Conner he was held without bail for a hearing on Friday. Michael Angelo, interested first on charge of aiding Reed, and Francisco Perrelli were each held as witnesses in $1,000 bonds.

All three were taken to the Cambridge jail.

Quarrel Over a Cat.

As far as the police have been able to learn, the only cause for the crime was the ill feeling between the Angelo and the Reed families due to the cattle made by the Angelo cat to the fowls chicken house.

Only a few feet away from Charles Reed when he was shot was his foster sister, Helen V. Reed, a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter the young woman, nearly crazed by the tragedy, told how she had tried to prevent it.

"I was standing at the grape arbor between the house and the chicken house," she said. Charles came to the door and I urged him to stay in the house because I knew the Italian family were in an ugly mood. They had been so since I went to Mrs. Angelo and told her that she must keep her cat in the house. I threatened to shoot the cat if I caught it at the chickens again.

Threatened with Knife.

"Mrs. Angelo told me that she would not keep the cat in the house. She threatened me with a knife and warned me not to touch her cat. Then she told me what she would do if I touched the cat.

"But I couldn't get Charlie to stay in the house. He insisted on going down to the chicken house. He was just coming out of the door when I heard a shot and exclaimed, 'They have shot him!' I rushed down and was in time to catch him before he fell. When I saw the terrible wound in his head I knew that he was dying and I ran for father."

It was found to-day that the shot that killed young Reed was fired from a side window in the rear of the house at No. 143 Orchard street, where the Italians lived. The pistol was held close to a screen, the police say, the impression of the screen to-day with the bullet hole plainly marked.

Angelo Proves Innocence.

It was at first thought by the Reeds that the man who rode away on a bicycle had done the shooting. Mrs. Reed, the mother of the dead boy, was standing in the doorway of his home and saw the man ride rapidly away. This man was found to be Michael Angelo. He satisfied them that he did not do the shooting. He and Frank Perrelli laid the blame on Zeccola, and when the latter was arrested he readily admitted the shooting.

Zeccola was trailed by Chief Cooney to the home of the aid of Patrolmen Nixon and Souberman he was located at No. 6 Lincoln street, where his lady love, Miss Marie Antonetti, lives. He made no resistance and readily admitted the shooting.

He is a brother of Mrs. Mary Angelo and he said that he shot Reed because young Reed had threatened to kill his sister.

Was Reed's Adopted Son.

The police believe there is yet much to be found in the Reed case. It is not often that a man dies for so small a cause as did Charles J. Reed. Young, popular, well educated and with bright prospects, he was adopted when he had threatened the life of a cat that had several times raided the chicken coop of his foster father, John Reed, for twenty years superintendent of the Watertown Peat Farm.

It is the second affidavit that has come to the Reed home within a year, for two years ago Mrs. Reed died, and none mourned her more than Charles, the adopted son, who fairly idolized the woman who had mothered him every grown years. Since he had been left a helpless baby on the doorstep of the Reed home, John Reed, now an old man, is bowed down with grief, and Helen V. Reed, the foster sister, is the only one who saw her brother murdered, is almost prostrated.

Employment runs high in Watertown, for it has become known that just before the murder Reed had told his employers that he had been threatened—this time with a knife—and till on account of the Reeds' desire to protect their own property.

AMERICAN'S HIDDEN GOLD AT NANTASKET TOMORROW

RED DOLLAR SIGN GIRL TELLS WHERE YOU MAY FIND HER AND GET $50.

"I'm the Red Dollar Sign Girl. I shall be at Nantasket Beach to-morrow. I shall have $50 in gold for the first person who finds me."

"Look for me in Paragon Park Between 3 and 4 o'clock. Look for my Face in the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN To-morrow. It will appear."

By the Red Dollar Sign Girl.

I am going to Nantasket Beach to-morrow with $50 in gold for the person who first recognizes me. And I propose to make it a great deal easier to find me than it was at Revere Beach last Sunday.

About 150,000 people searched for me at Revere Beach. I hope there will be fully as many or more people at Nantasket, on the beach and in Paragon Park.

I am anxious to be found and to have a chance of making someone happy with the $50 in gold given to me by the BOSTON AMERICAN. Because of that fact I propose to give you chance to get another view of me.

In the SUNDAY AMERICAN to-morrow my face will be printed. It will be reproduced from a real photograph taken by Purdy.

I am going to be in Paragon Park from 3 to 4 o'clock. I will go into one or two of the attractions. If I am not recognized I shall appear in Paragon Park again at 7 o'clock. I will remain in the park until recognized.

It might be a good idea for those who want the $50 to be in the end of Paragon Park near the entrance about 7:30 o'clock, if I have not been found before that.

For hints as to how to find the rest of the $200 in gold and the ticketed to Paragon Park, to be hidden at Nantasket to-morrow, read the thrilling Buried Treasure story in to-morrow's AMERICAN.

$200 GOLD AWAITS YOU AT NANTASKET

Get ready to dig in the sand and search Paragon Park to-morrow for $200 in gold. It will be in bright double-eagles, eagles and half-eagles.

It promises to be a great day at Nantasket, the greatest in the history of the resort. Seven five cents in to-morrow's AMERICAN. It may prove the luckiest investment of your life.

The second instalment of the thrilling Buried Treasure story will be found folded in the Comic Supplement of the AMERICAN to-morrow. Read it carefully. You will find directions for finding the gold pieces.

Every person is eligible for the hunt. Many of the shining gold pieces that were found by boys and girls at Revere Beach last Sunday will be found by men and women, the older persons having a lesson in perseverance. They kept right at it and the more unexpected pursuit.

But there was one of the marvelous things of that feature of the search.

That meant at least a five-dollar gold piece. To-morrow there will be distributed quite a number of ten-dollar gold pieces. Perhaps one of them will be at Nantasket.

It should not be forgotten that the Girl will be in Paragon Park and will be at Nantasket Beach to-morrow, and she will give the first person who recognizes her $50. She will positively be in Paragon Park between 3 and 4 o'clock. If she is not captured then she will reappear in the park at 7 o'clock and remain until recognized.

While the girl is in the park she will visit one or two of the attractions. Look for her face in to-morrow's AMERICAN.

Besides the $200 in gold to be hidden there will be a large number of Paragon Park tickets secreted all over the beach. Some of these will admit to all of the attractions of the park.

Order to-morrow's AMERICAN at once. Read the Buried Treasure story. Also look for further information as to where the Girl with the Red Dollar Sign will be.

OLD HOME WEEK BUREAU TRACES LOST FRIENDS

American's Postoffice System Will Locate Old Chums Free of Charge.

WILL WORK BOTH WAYS

Have you any old friends or any long-lost relatives coming to Boston's Old Home Week and whom you would like to locate while they are here?

If you have, then why don't you make free and welcome use of the BOSTON AMERICAN'S OLD HOME WEEK POSTOFFICE AND INFORMATION BUREAU?

This Bureau has just been opened. It is intended expressly to allow Bostonians to find people coming here for Old Home Week and to allow people coming here for Old Home Week to find Bostonians they would like to see.

The services of the Bureau is entirely free. It is intended as a convenience, as part of the general effort to help the Old Home Week along.

The bureau is located at No. 80 Summer street, Boston. Your questions about people coming to Boston will receive prompt attention.

Thousands of Visitors.

Old Home Week will bring thousands of people to the city. Men and women who formerly lived here and who have been long planning to return to the old home will take advantage of the favorable occasion to re-visit Boston.

Among these thousands of probable visitors will there not be one or more whom you would greatly like to see again?

You, Mr. Bostonian, don't you remember Bill Jones who used to have the desk next to you in school and with whom you used to play and fight and chum around? Well, Bill moved to Seattle, Washington, twenty years ago. Wouldn't you like to see Bill and talk over old times with him? Of course you would.

Well, Bill may come to Boston's Old Home Week. That is, there are thousands of Bill Smiths, to use a general expression, who are coming here for the reunion. And there are thousands of Bostonians who would like to see these Bill Smiths if they only knew where the latter were going to stay while in town.

The question comes up, therefore, how to find out where Bill Smith is going to be while here? The BOSTON AMERICAN'S Old Home Week Postoffice and Information Bureau is the answer.

You write to the Bureau, telling whom you would like to find, his or her name and present home. Also your own name and address. The Bureau will keep a list of these names and they will also be printed in the BOSTON AMERICAN. Thousands of persons will be enabled to find one another.

Don't forget to use the BOSTON AMERICAN'S OLD HOME WEEK POSTOFFICE AND INFORMATION BUREAU. It is free of charge. If you are coming to town for Old Home Week, have your mail addressed to it. Make appointments to meet your friends there. Make the Bureau your Old Home Week home.

If you know some friend is coming here and wish to meet him at some appointed place, write to him or tell, describe the BOSTON AMERICAN NEWS BUREAU and add: "Meet me at the Bureau."

TRUST BUSTING JUSTICE JAILS 23 TRADESMEN

Wealthy Business Men of Toledo Convicted of Conducting Monopoly.

ARE GIVEN NINE MONTHS

TOLEDO, July 13.—For violating the Valentine anti-trust law, which makes any conspiracy in restraint of trade a crime, twenty-three representatives and wealthy business men of the city each have been sentenced to nine months, and nine others were fined $1,000 each.

All that saved the twenty-three convicted men from being taken immediately to the workhouse to begin their prison sentence was that that institution is in quarantine because of cases of smallpox among the inmates. This necessitated a suspension of sentence for ten days.

Nine Fined $1,000 Each.

The summary punishment was inflicted upon the thirty-two wealthy business men by Judge Landley W. Morris in the Lucas County Court of Common Pleas. Judge Morris also sentenced the fee dealers to jail a year each.

Many of those sentenced to prison to-day are men of prominence in the social and club life of Toledo as well as in the business world.

To-day's convictions were the result of an investigation by the grand jury, begun last April, into the business methods of lumber dealers, brick manufacturers, bridge builders and plumbers.

Pooled Interests.

The convicted lumbermen were in an organization called the Lumbermen's Bureau of Credit Company, ostensibly an organization to protect their interests. Evidence showed that the members met and not only discussed ratings and accounts but also agreed on a uniform price list. It was also shown they forced Toledo people to pay more for lumber than residents on either side of Toledo.

The brickmen all sold their entire output to one company, composed of all the manufacturers. In other words, they pooled their interests so that each individual saw no opportunity whatever to say what price his material should bring where it should be sold or anything about it.

GETTEMY TELLS LABOR DEMANDS

WASHINGTON, July 13.—There is a big demand for labor of all kinds throughout the country, judging from the character of the replies Chief Powderly of the immigration division is receiving from officials of the various States. Farm labor especially is wanted in the South and West, but factory labor is needed in New England and other parts of the East. Among the replies which Mr. Powderly has received is one from Charles F. Gettemy, chief of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of Massachusetts, and L. H. Carroll, labor commissioner of New Hampshire.

In his letter Mr. Gettemy says: "Relative to your first and second inquiries as to where the demand for workmen is most urgent, and as to what class of labor is needed, the demand for workmen in Massachusetts at the present time is most urgent for farm hands; the demand comes from nearly every agricultural community, especially for such as can milk. The demands come to the State free employment office at Boston, not only from Massachusetts, but from Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

"There is also a great demand from mill centres in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Maine for weavers, spinners, etc., the class desired being men with families."

GIRL, RUN DOWN BY AUTO, DEAD

NEW HAVEN, Ct., July 13.—As a result of injuries received by being struck by an automobile, Miss Grace M. Critchen, aged twenty-five years, of First avenue, West Haven, is dead. Miss Critchen was alighting from a trolley car when she was hit by a touring car driven by Vance Scherfel of Bridgeport, a local auto garage in Bridgeport. Coroner Mix is investigating.

FAKE SPIRITS RULE CZAR, SAYS BERLIN NEWSPAPER

AUTOCRAT IS REPORTED TO BE IN THE GRASP OF ASTROLOGERS AND SORCERERS.

BERLIN, July 13.—Fake spirits absolutely rule Russia to-day. Spiritualistic fakirs preying on the Czar's superstitious belief in spiritualism and mysticism, dominate the monarch's councils. These fakirs, in turn controlled by a court camarilla, through alleged communication with the spirits of Nicholas's ancestors guide the Emperor's wavering policy.

This is the gist of revelations made today by the Tageblatt in a long article describing the present court intrigues existing in the Czar's domain.

Behind the throne, the court minister, Count Beckendorff, court marshal; Prince Orloff and Prince Pulatin are numbered as the leading members of this camarilla. Opposed to them have they brought the Czar under their domination through their spiritualistic chicanery that even Premier Stolypin retains royal favor only by playing into the hands of the cabal.

The Grand Duke Peter Nicholaievitch, an inveterate seeker of novelty, encourages the Czar's belief in the spiritualistic guidance the latter imagines himself to receive from every dead emperor since Peter's Schmorr home at Znamenskoye, where the mummified remains of the astrologers furnished by the court clique.

JAP EDITOR CALLS TALK OF WAR ABSURD

NEW YORK, July 13.—"That there can be no question of war between Japan and the United States is as plain as the axiom that two and two make four," writes Kojiro Matsukata, a Japanese of high rank and editor of the Kobe Shibun, one of the most influential newspapers in Japan, in an editorial in the Evening World to-day. Mr. Matsukata was educated in America. He is here with Admiral Baron Yamamoto.

"As a nation we Japanese are puzzled by this war talk," he continues. "There is no real war party in Japan. There are perhaps 10,000 men out of 50,000,000 who are excited. This class, which here would probably be termed 'jingoes,' is known in Japan 'yukigumas, or 'thoughtless ones.'

Do Not Clamor for War.

"But even these do not clamor for war. Their only request is that our government prove itself strong enough to demand redress for the damage inflicted on our countrymen in San Francisco.

"As for the San Francisco affair, it is to our mutual national relations as the sting of a gnat on human flesh.

"If the honor of our nation were at stake we would fight. But national honor is not involved. For our own sakes we were forced to go to war with Russia. Sooner or later that clash had to come.

"Your American Jingoes' can perhaps talk lightly of war. The only battles they have ever seen were those in defense of your Spanish campaign. That contest so quickly decided and dreamed like resources of your nation so lightly that you can afford to waste your strength on it.

"With us the old father and mother were forced to go for fatherhood while their sons were on the battlefield.

No Danger to America.

"When a man is very rich he often does not know the exact amount of his wealth. So, I think, it is with you Americans. Your prosperity is so great you fail to realize its full extent. You are, to my mind, in no danger of war with any power.

"The possible sending of your fleet to the Pacific is not looked on by anyone in Japan as a menace. eW regard the presence of a strong American squadron in Japanese waters more as a guarantee of peace."

EPIDEMIC OF SHOOTING DUE TO BOWIE CASE

By Boston American Leased Wire.

LA PLATA, Md., July 13.—An epidemic of killings, the outcome of establishment of the pardon law justification for shooting, is expected in Charles County as the result of the verdict of the freeing of Mrs. Bowie and her son Beary.

The first attempt to invoke the unwritten law occurred early to-day, when Jerry Thompson, a farmer of Faulkner, and William Richardson exchanged shots as the result of an insult the latter is alleged to have paid Mrs. Thompson.

Pursued with Shotgun.

Thompson discovered Richardson in a field near his farm. Arming himself with a shotgun, the farmer went into the woods after Richardson. The latter secreted himself and as Thompson passed began firing at him with a revolver. Three shots, none of which took effect, were exchanged before Thompson captured the fire.

Richardson escaped in the woods and was arrested later at his home by Constable Walter Hanson. He was not injured. Both the principals are colored. Richardson was arrested on a charge of attempting to kill and taken to the county jail at this place.

Men Fear Relatives' Revenge.

It is said that at least two young men socially prominent in Charles county have made hurried preparations to leave their homes, expecting to be waylaid and shot under conditions similar to the Priscilla Bowie-Dooley case.

Besides these affrays, it is predicted by people here that the Posey-Posey and Bowie families will follow the acquittal of the young man in precipitating lives of Posey are angry and threats of revenge are freely made.

PRISONERS ESCAPE FROM FORT CELLS

NEW YORK, July 13.—William H. Carrick and Peter Tinsley, prisoners in Fort Hamilton, under sentence of two years and a half and two years respectively, for desertion from the Eighty-fourth Company, Coast Artillery, escaped from their cells by a mysterious manner, Thursday night, and are still at large.

N. Y. "MAYOR" IS RECEIVER OF STOLEN GOODS

—BIRD S. COLER.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, July 13.—"Mayor" McClellan is bitterly attacked in a stinging article by Borough President Bird S. Coler in Coler's Bulletin. He refers to the "Mayor" as a Lilliputian, short in mental and moral stature. He says that McClellan is holding stolen goods and that his dismissal of Corporation Counsel Ellison makes the third change in that office in a year and a half, a thing that means a great financial loss to the city, which has to fight corporations with lawyers of lesser training who are allowed to hold their jobs.

"The Mayor has something which may not belong to him, as has the Sugar Trust, as has the Standard Oil Company, as have all other predatory corporations, receivers of stolen goods," he declares. "He chose McCarren quite naturally as his protector."

SHOT TRYING TO EVADE ARREST

In a fierce battle at an early hour today between four Italian section hands and Henry Peoples and Fred Cobert on the New Haven Railroad tracks at Walpole, one of the Italians was shot in the leg, while the others were all cut and bruised. Patrolman Howard Paiton, trying to arrest the Italians, was attacked with knives. All of the Italians were arrested. Peoples and Cobert had free fights with the Italians before they were overpowered and locked up. The wounded Italian will die.

KICKED BY HORSE, MAN NEAR DEATH

PLYMOUTH, July 13.—James Mc-Laughlin, twenty-five years old, who works for H. N. Wood, a stable-keeper on South street, was probably fatally kicked by a horse late yesterday. One hoof struck the young man in the face and the other in the stomach.

FARMER ATTACKED BY THUGS IN BARN

CHARLESTON, Me., July 13.—Elmer E. Libby, a prosperous farmer, was knocked insensible in his own barn last night and robbed of $700. Mr. Libby was attracted to the barn by a loud noise and went to investigate. As he stepped into the barn he received a savage blow over the head with a baseball bat.

CONTRADICTS STUDLEY CASE MANIAC STORY

Chinese Picnic Caterer Discredits Taylor's Tale of a Demented Man.

NEGRO HOSTLER IS MISSING

SALEM, N. H., July 13.—Though several circumstances have arisen which might prove valuable in the hunt for the slayer of Mrs. Annie H. Studley of Boston, whose body was found in Canobie Lake early last week, Sheriff Collis and his deputies admit their inability thus far to solve the mystery.

George Washington Taylor, the negro hostler, who tod of hearing screams on the night the woman is thought to have been slain, and of a demented man running into the woods by the lake road when he approached, is still sought by the officials who wish to further question him about these circumstances. Taylor has not been seen since the crime, and is not at his home in Lawrence.

Some parts of Taylor's story are contradicted by Adolphus Hall, the negro caterer for the Chinese picnic held at the lake on the fatal Monday. Taylor worked for him as a dishwasher that day. Hall says that after they left Canobie Lake station on the train at 6:10 p. m., Taylor got off at Salem station. If he returned to the lake he must have walked north. He told the officers that he walked from the picnic grounds toward Levi Woodbury's Summer place, along Policy road, to see a girl employed there. It was in this walk, he said, that he saw the demon. He would have been walking north according to his own story.

Supervisor N. P. Ryan of the Concord Insane Asylum, who has been here for two days with photographs of two escaped prisoners, to identify, if possible, the strange acting man seen near the scene of the tragedy, has issued a reassuring statement to the citizens of the town, saying that he does not believe his former are in this vicinity.

The sheriff would like to interview a woman of twenty-seven years who was found for larceny in Lawrence yesterday, who has been camping on the shore of Canobie Lake, believing that she might give valuable information of the events transpiring on the fatal night.

The young woman, who gave the name of Virginia Thompson, was convicted of stealing about $40 from the bookkeeper at Ired Brothers' store in Lawrence. She was fined $25, which was paid by a friend, who gave the name of Joseph Sarkis of Boston. He said he had formerly been employed as a bell boy at the Parker House in Boston. His residence is No. 12 Chestnut street, Boston. Both dropped out of sight after her release, the girl telling the authorities she was camping on the lake.

REACH CRISIS IN STRIKE OF TELEGRAPHERS

By Boston American Leased Wire.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 13.—An attempt to settle the differences between the striking telegraphers and the Postal and Western Union Telegraph will be made immediately by U. J. Le Lacheur, Commissioner Neill, Deputy President Konenkamp of Pittsburg, Michael J. Reidy of Boston and Jos. M. Sullivan of New York, members of the national executive board of the Telegraphers' Union arrived last night from Chicago.

Commissioner Neill's effort to settle the strike will be final, it is declared, as no pathetic strikes will be called all over the country and peaceably handle

Closeted for Hours.

Neill was visited by District Superintendent Miller of the Western Union Company. The two remained closeted for three hours. Commissioner Neill was reticent concerning the conference. He admitted that on the way West he had conferred with some of the strikers and with the friends from the members of the National Executive Board, who were his fellow travelers.

"I am here on my own initiative, and not at any request of the President," said Mr. Neill. "I have not looked much into the strike. The conference with Miller and the Western Union has met me.

We will never agree upon that I cannot speak upon publicly. There was no special significance to the fact that I am concerned in Mr. Miller's call. I do not know what method we will adopt. As long I will be here."

Union Men Meet Small.

While Commissioner Neill and Superintendent Miller were closeted, President Small of the Telegraphers was in conference with the three members of the National Executive Board at headquarters in Oakland. Only a few union men were present.

WIFE ASLEEP, CAPTAIN LOW WOULD NOT SAIL

The Massachusetts nautical training ship Enterprise could not get under way or have sails bolsted if there was any danger of waking the wife of Commander Low, according to a statement made positively to-day by one of the striking cadets of the Enterprise to the BOSTON AMERICAN. The name of the cadet is withheld, but it is in the possession of the BOSTON AMERICAN. The statement was made as follows:

"When the Enterprise was at New Haven she was delayed for more than four hours, although she had steam up, because Captain Low's wife was having a nap, and the captain did not want to awaken her.

"The sails on the mizzen mast have not been bended since the strike began, because the mast is so close to the quarters of the captain's wife that Captain Low said that the noise in hoisting the sail would disturb her.

Since the Enterprise cadets went on strike for better food and more shore liberty many interesting revelations have developed concerning conditions aboard the vessel. But the statement that the ship had to be run according to the naps the commander's wife was taking is the most startling so far.

WOMAN HURLED DOWN STAIRS BY LIGHTNING

PLYMOUTH, July 13.—A half-dressed man, furiously riding bare back, called Chemical Engine 1 to No. 41 Stanford street, where a blaze was in progress in the roof, caused by lightning.

The bolt entered the house through the chimney, ran around the upper rooms, knocking off plaster and badly twisting an iron bed. Mrs. Daniel W. Sears, aged fifty, was thrown down stairs and landed unhurt, while a lamp which she carried was unbroken.

Her daughter, Mrs. Edwin F. Nutter, who lives next door, had come to her mother's home because she was afraid of the tempest. She was frying fish at the stove while her ten-year-old son lay on a couch nearby. Mrs. Nutter was rendered unconscious by the bolt, while the boy was stunned. The damage to the house was not great.

THE MILLIONAIRE GIRL

A Stirring Novel of Love and Heroic Adventure

CHAPTER I.

The Heiress to Millions.

It would have been difficult to find a happier girl in the whole county of Oxfordshire, or, indeed, in the whole of England, than Oliver Parmenter, the daughter of Gregory Parmenter's millions, as she sat in the rosary of Silverbeech on the morning of her birthday, a lovely day in June.

She was reading a letter from her lover, and looking it fell on her lap, leaned back smiling in response to the thoughts which the letter had produced.

Almost everything about a girl could wish for in life was here. No one questioned her claim to beauty. A little above the middle height, she had a supple figure of exquisite mould, with the free carriage of perfect balance, every movement and gesture heightened by natural grace. Her face was as beautiful as her form. Her head forehead, white as alabaster, was surmounted by a wealth of very chestnut hair; dark, almost black, eyebrows and lashes shaded eyes of the deepest blue—a striking contrast, and their fineness, although delicately chiselled, were eloquent of character, self reliance and strength.

Would then a crushing blow have fallen across her face and drew her brows together. This was not the thought of any one evil—her father's health.

Her father's death, some years before, had deeply affected Mr. Parmenter, and he had invested his wealth and come over to England, purchasing the fine estate of Silverbeech at Bellborough, and devoting himself to the complete change of scene and life.

So the long, strenuous life in a hot climate came to an unsuiting his huge fortune had told on a none too robust constitution, and the blow of his wife's death was one from which he never entirely recovered. His life was now centred in Oliver, whom he loved passionately, a love which she returned with her whole heart; but he knew that his days were numbered, and his one great desire was to see her happily married before the end came.

Any that desire was now close to realization.

During the previous year Oliver had met Basil Ellis to Nausheim on account of his health trouble, and, disliking everything that savored of ostentation, he had scrupulously refrained from letting the fact of his great wealth be known. And when Basil found he was staying a young soldier, Lieutenant John Meredyth, who had come home from the South African war and was convalescing from ill health before taking a post at the Foreign Office. The two young people were drawn much together, and Oliver in love with each other before a fortnight's end. The young soldier knew that he was the only child of the millionaire owner of Silverbeech and Olive Parmenter knew that he was the son and heir of Lord Bellborough, whose estate and home lay so close to her own home.

It was a love match in the fullest sense, and Mr. Parmenter had gladly given his consent. But some difficulties had arisen from the other side, and now, on the birthday, she had received a letter of what he was coming over with great and glad intent.

She guessed what it was and her heart warmed and her cheek flushed with delightful anticipation.

"Jack has won over his mother at last," she told herself, her very veins tingling with delight at the thought; and she picked up the letter to read it for the fortieth time when a footstep on a path near broke in upon her reverie.

Silk glanced around and rose with an instinctive obeisance to a figure of one of about thirty years of age, with dark, handsome features and full, compelling brown eyes, raised his hat and bowed, saying with a confident smile:

"I wish to be the first with my greetings, Miss Parmenter, and when I saw you in the rosary I ventured to come straight here instead of going first to the house. May I wish you many happy returns of the day?"

"Thank you, Mr. Merridew," she replied, giving him her hand and withdrawing it instantly. "My father is in the house."

"I came to see you, princess. I wish you to do me a great service."

"Yes?" She did not resume her seat, but stood as if expecting him to leave her.

"I have something of great importance to say to you. Please sit down again."

After a moment's hesitation she did as he asked, and he drew a garden chair close to hers and took a seat on it, facing her.

"First I wish you to allow me to offer you a slight birthday present of my regard. This little trinket," and he took out a costly and beautiful bracelet of brilliants.

"Thank you very much for your kind thought, but really I could not accept it," she said firmly, with a very decided shake of the head. "I could not."

He frowned and his eyes showed anger. "Why not?"

"It is impossible, Mr. Merridew, really. I could not think of it."

"You must take it," he said, fixing his keen, audacious eyes on her, "or I shall feel myself insulted and insulted of brilliants.

A PRINCE OF SINNERS

BY E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM AUTHOR OF "THE MALEFACTORS"

"As a matter of fact, she was having tea with Kingston Brooks."

"'Well, I never!' Selina exclaimed, tossing her head."

Synopsis

KINGSTON BROOKS, a young solicitor of Manchester, England, is selected, through the good offices of Peter Bullson, as political agent for the Radical candidate for Parliament. He is overjoyed at his luck. That night he dines at Bullson's home, meeting Mrs. Bullson's niece, and Sophia and Selina, his daughters. He is much taken with Miss Selina, but dislikes the others. The next day a strange caller tells him of the death of his father, of which Kingston never had heard the particulars. The visitor gives his name as the Marquis of Arranmore. Mr. Bullson, wishing to get into society for the sake of his girls, plans a party.

A Question for the Country

THE committee meeting broke up at a late hour in the afternoon amidst some excitement, and Mr. Bullsom walked back to his office with Brooks. A fine rain was falling, and the two men were close together under one umbrella.

"What do you think of it, Brooks?" Bullsom asked anxiously.

"To tell the truth, I scarcely know," the youngster answered. "Ten years ago there could have been but one answer—today—well, look there."

The two men stood still for a moment. They were in the centre of the town, at a spot from which the main thoroughfares radiated into the suburbs and manufacturing centres. Everywhere the pavements and the open space where a memorial tower stood were crowded with loiterers.

Men in long lines stood upon the curbstones, their hands in their pockets, watching, waiting—God knows for what. There were all sorts, of course, the professional idlers and the drunkard were there, but the others—there was no lack of them. There was no lack of men, white-faced, dull-eyed, dejected, some of them actually with the brand of starvation to be seen in their sunken cheeks and wasted limbs.

No wonder that the swing doors of the public houses, where there were light and warmth inside, opened and shut continually.

"Look," Brooks repeated, with a tremor in his tone. "There are hundreds of them—and all of them must have some sort of a home to go to. Fancy the overmanning, perhaps children—and nothing to take home to them. It's such an old story that it sounds hackneyed and commonplace. But God knows there's no other tragedy on His earth like it."

Mr. Bullsom was uncomfortable.

"I've given a hundred pounds to the Unemployed Fund," he said.

"It's pretty well spent already for me a thousand," Brooks answered. "Some day they may learn their strength, and they will not suffer then, like brute animals, in silence."

Bullsom was silent for several moments. "I will tell you what it is, Brooks," he said. "I'll send you another hundred to the Unemployed Fund to-night."

"It's generous of you, Mr. Bullsom," the young lawyer answered. "You'll never regret it. But look here. There's a greater responsibility even than feeding these poor fellows resting upon us to-day. They don't want our charity. They've an equal right to live with us. What they want, and what they have a right to, is just legislation. That's where we come in. Politics isn't a huge joke, or the vehicle for any one man's personal ambition. We who interest ourselves, however remotely, in them, impose upon ourselves a great obligation. We've got to find the truth.

"That's why I hesitate to say anything against Henslow's new departure. We're off the track now. I want to hear all that Henslow has to say. We must not neglect a single chance whilst that terrible cry is ever in our ears."

Politics

They parted at the tram terminus, Mr. Bullsom taking a car for his suburban paradise. An omen, he was the centre of a little group of acquaintances.

"And how goes the election, Bullsom?" some one asked him.

Mr. Bullsom was in no hurry to answer the question. He glanced round the car, collecting the attention of those who might be supposed interested.

"I will answer that question better," he said, "after the mass meeting on Saturday night. I think that Henslow's success or failure will depend on that."

"Got something up your sleeve, eh?" his first questioner remarked.

"Maybe," Mr. Bullsom answered. "Maybe not. But apart from the immediate matter of the election, there is one thing, gentlemen, which may interest you."

He paused. One thumb stole toward the armhole of his waistcoat. He liked to see these nightly companions of his hang upon his words. It was a proper and gratifying tribute to the success of a man of affairs.

"I have just left," he said, "our future Member."

The significance of his speech was not immediately apparent.

"Henslow! Oh, yes. Committee meeting this afternoon, wasn't it?" some one remarked.

"I do not mean Henslow," Mr. Bullsom replied. "I mean Kingston Brooks."

The desired sensation was engendered.

"Why, he's your new agent, isn't he?"

"Young fellow who plays cricket rather well."

"Great golfer, they say!"

"Makes a good speech, some one was saying."

"Gives free lectures at the Secular Hall."

Mr. Bullsom looked around him.

"He is all of those things, and he does all these things. He is one of these youngsters who has the knack of doing everything well. Mark my words, he'll get there. He has his first case of any importance, and I got him right on a platter at Henslow. He's bound to rise. He's ambitious, and he's got the brains. He'll be M. P. for this borough before we know where we are."

Making Plans

Half a dozen men of more or less importance made a mental note to nod to Kingston Brooks next time they saw him, and Mr. Bullsom trudged off to his home with fresh schemes maturing in his mind. In the domestic circle he further unburdened himself.

"Mrs. Bullsom," he said, "I am thinking of giving a dinner party. How many people do we know better than ourselves?"

Mrs. Bullsom was aghast, and the young ladies, Selina and Louise, who were in the room, were indignant.

"Double pops," Selina exclaimed, "what do you mean?"

"Wait and say," he answered, gruffly. "We're plain people, your mother and I, at any rate, and when you come to reckon things up, I suppose you'll admit that we're not much in the social way. There's plenty of people living round us in a slight smaller house than we don't know us, and wouldn't if they could—and I'm not so sure that it's altogether the fault of the people round us either, Selina," he added, breaking ruthlessly in upon a sotto-voce remark of that young lady's.

"Well, I never!" Selina exclaimed, tossing her head.

"Come, come, I don't want no sauce from you, girls," he added, drifting toward the fireplace, and adopting a more assured tone as he reached his favorite position. "I've reasons for wishing to have Mr. Kingston Brooks here, and I'd like him to meet gentlefolk. Now, there's the Vicar and his wife. Do you suppose they'd come?"

"Well, I should like to know why not," Mrs. Bullsom remarked, laying down her knitting, "when it's only three weeks ago you sent him ten guineas for the curates' fund. Come indeed! They'd better!"

Then there's Dr. Seventon. Mr. Bullsom continued, "and his wife. Better drop him a line and tell him to look in and see me at the office. I can invent something to tell him. They say Mrs. Sevenson is exclusive. But I'll just let him know she's got to come. Now, who else, girls?"

"The Huntingdons might come—if they know that it was this sort of an affair," Selina remarked thoughtfully.

"And Mr. Seaton," Louise added. "I'm sure he's most gentlemanly."

"I don't want gentlemanly people this time," Mr. Bullsom declared. "I want gentle people. That's all there is about it. I bet you ask who you like to the house, and give you what you want for subscriptions and clothes and such like. You've had a free hand. Now let's see something for it. Half a dozen couples will be enough if you can't get more, but I won't have the Vicar, or the Mayoress or any of that podgy set. You understand that? And first of all, you, Selina, had better write to Mr. Brooks and ask him to come with us in a friendly way one night the week after next, when the election is over and done with."

Missing!

"In a friendly way, pa?" Selina repeated, doubtfully. "But we can't ask those sort of people whom we know so lightly like that—and besides, Mr. Brooks might not dress if we put it like that!"

"A nice lot you know about gentle people and their ways," Mr. Bullsom remarked, with scorn. "A young fellow like Brooks would jump at the chance. He'll be all right, even if we were alone, as long as there were ladies there. And as for the dinner, you don't suppose I'm such a long as to leave that to Ann. I shall go to the Queen's Hotel, and have 'em send a cook and waiters, and run the whole show. Don't know why I didn't send to London. You get the people! I'll feed 'em!"

"Do as your father says, Selina," Mrs. Bullsom said, "and I'll see to the rest. It will be very nice."

"Where's Mary?" Mr. Bullsom inquired. "This is a bit in her line."

Selina tossed her head.

"I'm sure I don't know why you should say that, pa," she declared. "Mary knows nothing about society, and she has no friends who would be the least use to us."

"Where is she, anyway?" Mr. Bullsom demanded.

No one knew. As a matter of fact, she was having tea with Kingston Brooks.

CHAPTER III.

The Marquis of Arranmore

THEY had met almost on the steps of his office and only a few minutes after he had left Mr. Bullsom. Brooks was attracted first by a certain sense of familiarity with the trim, well-balanced figure, and immediately afterward she raised her eyes to his in passing. He wheeled sharply around and held out his hand.

"Miss Scott, isn't it? Do you know I have just been your uncle!"

She smiled a little absently. She looked tired, and her boots and skirt were splashed as though with much walking.

"Indeed! I suppose you see a great deal of him just now while the election is on?"

"I must make myself a perfect nuisance to him," Brooks admitted. "You see the work is all new to me, and he has been very busy many times before. Are you just going home?"

She nodded.

"And you are almost wet through, and quite tired out," he said. "Look here. Come across to Mellor's and have some tea with me, and I will put you in a car afterwards."

She hesitated—and he led the way across the street, giving her no opportunity to frame a refusal. The little tea-table was warm and cosy. He found a comfortable corner, and took her wet umbrella and cape away.

"I believe," he said, sitting down opposite her, "that I have saved your life."

"Then I am sorry," she answered, "that I feel grateful to you. I ought to be at home now, and I shall be the least likely to be a cheerful companion. I have had a most depressing afternoon."

"You had been to your tailor's," he suggested, "and your new gown is a failure—or is it even worse than that?"

She laughed dubiously. Then the tea was brought and for a moment their conversation was interrupted. He thought her very graceful as she bent forward and busied herself attending to his wants. Her affinity to Selina and Louise was indistinguishable. It was true that she was pale, but it was the pallor of refinement, the student's sober hue of color rather than the pallor of ill-health.

"Mr. Brooks," she said, presently, "you are busy with this election, and you are brought constantly in touch with all classes of people. Can you tell me why it is that it is so hard just now for poor people to get work? Is it true, what they tell me, that many of the factories in Manchester are closed, and many of those that are open are only working half and three-quarter time?"

"I am afraid that it is quite true, Miss Scott," he answered. "As for the first part of your question, it is very hard to answer. There seem to be so many causes at work just now."

"But it is the work of the politician purely to analyze these causes."

"I've should be," he answered. "Tell me what has brought this into your mind."

Frock of Silk

LIGHT-COLORED silk frocks for dressy evening wear for early Autumn are being very attractively developed along the lines of simple but dressy dresses of dainty wash fabrics and trimmed with fine laces, such as Valenciennes. A novel trimming effect is the use of an all-over Lunnville lace in the bodice and as foundation for the graduated folds, forming a deep flounce.

Writes this letter to the readers of the AMERICAN:

Dear Girls—I am writing for to-morrow's SUNDAY AMERICAN an article I want you all to read. Be sure you do not miss it, for I feel that it may be a help to many of you.

Young people are apt to be thoughtless about money matters, especially where pleasures are concerned, and as a warning to the girls who expect their men friends to treat them more lavishly than their means permit I make this appeal to you.

Think of your future, think of the young men's future, and do not help them to be reckless, thoughtless spendthrifts.

Read in Sunday's AMERICAN my few words of advice, so that you may help yourself to prosperity and a contented, happy home.

HOW TO BE BEAUTIFUL

REMEMBER that tea is good for keeping the complexion. The woman who drinks enough hot tea need not worry about drinking her water. The tea clears the skin and is a wonderful way.

Take cream with your tea if you are very tired; otherwise take lemon with it. Lemon and tea act as a great complexion clearer. A clove steadies the nerves.

Don't take your tea too hot.

Don't take your tea iced.

Don't take your tea at a regular hour every day, as though it was a meal, if you want the English complexion.

Take a certain quantity, the English rule of two cups is good, but three will do no harm if the cups are small and you are very tired.

Sip your tea, or, as the vegetarians say, "eat it." Don't swallow it whole in great gulps; it must be masticated if it is going to do your system good.

Make your tea a pale amber in color, the paler the better.

TO REDUCE FLESH

DEAR PROFESSOR:

I am much too stout for my height and would like to know something that will reduce this flesh—something that I can do at home.

ANXIOUS.

AVOID all starchy and sweetened food, all cereals, vegetables containing sugar or starch, such as beans, peas, corn and potatoes; toast your bread and put salt on it instead of butter; drink skimmed milk if you drink milk at all, but hot water is better than any other liquid, especially if you add to it a little lemon juice. Sleep not more than seven hours and take no naps in the daytime. Take plenty of exercise, walking at least five miles a day or go out wheeling every day. If you cannot do this join a gymnasium where you can get the mechanical massage. The theory of all this exercise is that in increasing the action of the heart it throws more blood to the lungs and more oxygen must be taken into the lungs to purify this blood. The oxygen burns out the carbon or fat, and if the diet is such as to keep more from being introduced consequently the flesh must be reduced. The more starch and sugar that you eat the more carbon is to be burned away and the greater your task, so you will have to diet afterward laying on this fat. Therefore carefully if you would reap the desired reward.

FOR BLACKHEADS

DEAR PROFESSOR:

Kindly tell me if peroxide is good for removing blackheads from the nose and chin? If it is not, will you give me some simple remedy for them?

READER.

PEROXIDE will not of itself remove blackheads, but is of great value in creating them after you have opened them to remove the sebaceous matter. The very best thing for removing blackheads is to open the pores well by scrubbing gently with tincture of green soap and hot water, afterward laying on this fat lightly rubbing oil until the pores are steamed open. Then with an instrument for that purpose press out the matter which has accumulated, and bathe well the parts in peroxide. After this, rub in a soothing cream, and finally bathe in cold water, to which has been added a few drops of benzoin. Keep the parts cleansed with peroxide until after the blackheads have entirely disappeared and daily often with peroxide or benzoinated water, in order to contract the pores, which are usually larger than they should be.

Hints for Mothers, From One of Them

WHEN these little mortals God has given us begin to toddle about, how hard they work! Easily they get overheated and perspire; they look out for colds. Therefore do not overdress.

An all wool, light-weight band is advisable to be worn at all times; a light-weight wool shirt, a very much-worn one, thin and old; a thin wool gauze shirt, thin wool stockings—not socks. This would do for ordinarily warm weather.

Cool nights and morning put on a thin cotton shirt, if light-weight wool ones seem too much. When settled warm weather comes change the stockings to half cotton and wool, or all cotton for fat babies.

Keep babies comfortable as you can, for it will be necessary to their growing bodies. Hot days you can remove shirt and skirt, only let band stick like a postage stamp.

Just as important is the food.

Routinely clean utensils, clean hands, pure milk, kept cold as ice can keep it until ready for use, when the chill must be taken off. Milk is baby's mainstay. Junket is a pleasant change, as is the following for a fifteen-months-old baby: Egg coddled, baked potato, mutton broth, beef juice, used sparingly at first (all preparations made fresh; give baby nothing stale); cereals with top milk, unless the milk is unusually rich or the weather very hot.

Plenty of pure, cool water, going to bed and between meals, is Nature's beverage; to keep the machinery of baby's make-up right, with an occasional teaspoon of castor oil upon going to bed.

Barley gruel is excellent for babies inclined to Summer complaint, and orange juice for those of the constipated habit.

A good, sweet orange, squeezed and strained an hour or two after the morning meal, is the best medicine Nature recommends. SOPHIE W. VAN HORNEN.

Discontent Works All Kinds of Evil

DISCONTENT, if once allowed to assert itself, will prove one of the most inveterate enemies imaginable. It creeps into our lives so quietly and insidiously that all of a sudden, before one realizes it, we begin to be aware that there is a little growth continually fingering at our better nature with such persistence that we give way to fight against it.

Whatever may happen or whatever may not happen, we are prepared "to take up arms against a sea of trouble," and declare we are the worst treated people in the world. Nothing ever pleases or satisfies us.

Even if something turns out better, more advantageously than we anticipated, we declare petulantly that it would have been much nicer if things had turned out in some satisfactorily.

Fancy what it must be to those who are constantly with us and trying to please us to hear nothing but grumbling in return for the kindness and services they have rendered.

Can we really suppose for a moment that the fault-finders are popular or that they are in their heart of hearts happy members of the community?

When the spirit of discontent reigns in a home like some evil genii, instead of genial contentment, happiness must perforce be it good or ill, it means good-by to home happiness and most inevitably loosen the bonds of parental ties.

Ruins the Home

One discontented mortal has been sufficient to mar the happiness of a whole household. Think what it must be to the father and mother of a family who, perhaps, may be the wage earners, to hear nothing but carping criticism and fault-finding from a daughter or sister of the household, who, it must be borne in mind, has no right whatever to grumble because what they give it absolutely dependent on her relatives.

The never-satisfied person seems to think that there are no limitations to her carping criticisms. She further supposes that whatever be the condition she has a right to find fault. The sooner she is disillusioned on this point the better.

The fault-finder is never really happy for if she has no actual grievances she will conjure up imaginary ones, so as to keep her mind busily employed on that rock with which she is most at home. Her life then becomes a miserable existence indeed.

Discontent is the parent of many evils. If we believe we have the germs of this evil in us, we should do well to check it before it assumes gigantic proportions.

Always in Misery

Discontented people are surely the most miserable beings on the face of the earth. Not only are they unhappy, but they make other people wretched by their continual grumbling.

After all, we can't always expect things to go exactly as we would wish, and most of us have to be content with the best we can get—not often a best beat, but sometimes a fairly good one, and more or less disappointments.

It is then the normal-minded person who is thankful, but the discontented one grumbles. Never to be satisfied with anything or anybody shows a state of mind and temperament that wants very serious looking into.

Fancy what it must be to those who are constantly with us and trying to please us to hear nothing but grumbling in return for the kindness and services they have rendered.

Can we really suppose for a moment that the fault-finders are popular or that they are in their heart of hearts happy members of the community?

When the spirit of discontent reigns in a home like some evil genii, instead of genial contentment, happiness must perforce be it good or ill, it means good-by to home

MEAT PIE, POTATO CRUST

TAKE the cold meat left from a roast and dinner; cut into small pieces, place in a stew pan with a small onion cut fine. Add pepper and salt, then enough water to set to stewing. Stew slowly for about one hour. Line dish with the gravy and meat left from the dinner. Roll several fair sized potatoes and cream as you would to serve. Spread over the top of the stewed meat and onion. Cover with a well-beaten egg, and bake until brown.

NUT MAYONNAISE

REST a bowl on a block of ice and break in it two egg yolks. Whip the yolks slightly with an egg beater and work in, drop by drop, a half pint of olive oil. Season with salt and cayenne and cut with the juice of a lemon. Add the coarsely chopped meats from two dozen English walnuts. This mayonnaise is used with chicken, apple, celery and cheese salads.

MONDAY BARGAINS IN BOSTON'S BIG STORES

For Monday's best opportunities for Boston's busy shoppers see shoppers' complete guide in to-morrow's SUNDAY AMERICAN

Good Things Are Often Cheapest

THEY are really the cheapest in the end, as after repeated visits to the cleaning establishment they become so soiled to begin with—return as good as new in every way.

They also wash and shape much better than cheap ones. This advice applies particularly to white or light colored gloves.

Cheap boots are another false economy. They soon get out of shape, and spoil the look of even the prettiest and most shapely feet; but good ones, if carefully shaped after wearing, will look well even after repeated visits to the cobbler.

Boots last much longer if kept for some time before they are required for use. This lengthens the leather and doubles their ultimate life.

It is a mistake, on the other hand, to buy very expensive material for everyday washing frocks and blouses. Quite cheap zephyrs and cambrics very often wash and look as well as the more expensive cubs.

Dark coats and skirts, however, should always be of good material. Cheap material soon loses its freshness and often "sags" and gets a bad color after even a few weeks of really hard wear.

THE SPINSTER SAYS

NEARLY every woman thinks she is fulfilling a duty to Providence when she worries a good deal.

There is nothing like a large family to support to teach one good.

Optimism is that heroic trait which enables us to keep on believing in love, no matter how old we get.

The more a girl believes in men the less she knows about them.

It is no wonder that a man with an automobile gets to think he is such a fine fellow, so he should not be blamed for holding this opinion.

THE PROPOSAL

A VERY shy fellow was Dusky Sam;
He couldn't talk of his love to Angeline,
Tho' his love grew as fast as Jonah's gourd vine.

So he brought the telephone to his aid
To assist in wooing the modest maid.
"Miss Angeline, is dat you?" called he.
"Yas, dis is Angeline. Dis me."
"I—dat mean I say dat—I loves you—
Miss Angeline—I." "Yas." "Does you love me, too?"
"Yas, yas; of co's' I loves my beau—
Say, what's de reason you want to know?
Why, hol' de wire. Will you marry me?
True?"
"Yas. Co's' I will. Say—" Who is you?"

Advice to Anxious Sweethearts

By Beatrice Fairfax

DON'T BE TOO STRICT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been keeping company with a young man for three years and we are now engaged to be married next year. I want to know is this: Do you think it is right for the girl to go to the theatre or other gaiety in the theatre while I am absent from home on a visit? Also, do you think it right for him to go to dances I do not attend, because they are respectable? He knows I do not want him to go, although I have never told him not to go, but he has told him I did not approve of them.

ANXIOUS HEART.

If you were away from home I do not think his taking another girl to the theatre was such a very serious offence. It is not wise to draw the line too strictly in such small matters. He probably would not dream of doing such a thing if you were home. As to the dances that is a thing which you two must settle between yourselves. If he is aware that you disapprove of his attending dances it certainly would be kind on his part to pay some attention to your wishes. No doubt if you ask him to give them up he will do so.

CLEVELAND, July 13.—Manager McGuire and the Pilgrims are in excellent spirits as the result of capturing two of the four games played this series with the Naps.

"If we can do as well elsewhere in the West and keep up the pace after we return home we shall go to the front in leaps," said the "deacon" last night.

Captain Lajoie is still sore over the injury he received in Detroit at the hands of Ty Cobb, the fresh southerner. The way Bob talked yesterday, he will have a double cleaning coming, one from him and one from Harry Bemis, Cleveland catcher, when he ran into several weeks ago.

McGuire yesterday made the change that Cleveland fans thought was sure to come, namely to bat Ferris ahead of Knight.

Although the condition of Manager Lajoie's injured foot continues to improve, it now looks as if he will not be able to resume the managerial duties for a week and not play for two weeks.

Had Conference With Players.

Acting Manager Somers held a brief conference with the Naps in the clubhouse before the game yesterday afternoon and impressed upon them the necessity, now that Manager Lajoie is incapacitated, of their extending themselves to the utmost, so that the team will retain their position in the league race.

"Stevens was even a good better," commented Manager McGuire, as he slapped Young on the back after yesterday's game.

Thanks. I didn't have a thing; notice how hard they hit 'em," retorted the veteran twirler.

The Bostons will go direct to St. Louis after their game in Sandusky to-morrow. The Browns will play their last game here to-day. Young Pruett will probably work for the Hubites, and Liebhardt for the Clevelands.

The Boston's won yesterday's game, 5 to 1, through the great pitching of "Cy" Young. He allowed the Naps but four hits.

"Dust:" Rhodes, who pitched for the locals, did well, and it was largely through errors by Turner and Stovall that the visitors got their two runs, while the Naps made their lone tally on real hitting.

J.D. TRAVERS TO PLAY GRAHAM FOR GOLF TITLE

CLEVELAND, July 13.—Jerome D. Travers and Archie Graham, both members of New Jersey clubs, will meet today in the final 36-hole match for the national amateur golf championship over the Euclid links. Travers earned his right to go into the last match by defeating Warren K. Wood of Chicago and the present title holder, H. M. Byers of Pittsburg, while Graham took the measure of W. T. West of Philadelphia and Walter J. Travis, Jr., of Pittsburg, who had previously disposed of the veteran, Walter J. Travis.

BEALS WRIGHT DEFEATED IN FIRST ROUND

LONDON, July 13.—Norman Brokes of Australia defeated Beals C. Wright, American, in the first round of the preliminary contest for the Dwight Davis cup at Wimbledon to-day.

Brokes took the match in straight sets, 6—4, 6—4, 6—2.

QUILL BEATS DOYLE

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 13.—Tommy Quill of Brockton, defeated Johnny Doyle of New York, in the fourteenth round, at the Lymanville A. C., last night.

It was Quill's fight from the early rounds, but Doyle's gameness was responsible for his sticking the distance.

Doyle won the state middleweight championship this year, and put up a remarkable fast exhibition.

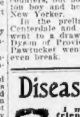
Quill from the outset went in to wind things up quickly, and planted left hooks and swings to Doyle's body, but found Doyle the toughest customer he had been up against. Doyle showed flashes of his fighting and got Quill a lot of trouble, by his shifty footwork.

The terrific body punching which Quill administered had the effect of slowing Doyle, but he took the gaff and came in the fourteenth round, when Quill caught Doyle on the point of the jaw with a right cross and he went down to take the count. It was the only square knock-down in a furious bout.

Quill began rushing from the start, but was not, for several rounds, with stiff punishes, but nothing could stop the Brockton boy and he gradually wore down the New Yorker.

In the preliminaries Young Clarke of Cornwille and Young Grim of Providence went to a draw in six rounds, and Young Dunn of Providence and Young Twiley of Pawtucket went the same distance to an even break.

Diseases of Men



I make no charge for a friendly talk and will quit all sick men to cure and take a permanent case. If you call I will tell you what ails you and how you can be remarkably cured with our charges.

I particularly give contracted diseases, the after effects of the secret vice, all lingering germs and blood diseases, including kidney and bladder trouble.

All methods are modern. My charges are the lowest. Patients can pay as able.

Only Two Clubs With Clean Scores
GLIDDEN TOURISTS IN WINDY CITY

BY J. C. KERRISON.

CHICAGO, July 13.—But two clubs remain in the tie for the Glidden trophy as the result of yesterdays run of 116 miles from South Bend to Chicago. They are the Buffalo and Pittsburg Automobile Clubs, both organizations having finished with a clean score. The Westchester Club, which was clean up to the start, yesterday had fallen back into sixth place, being credited with a penalization of 336 points, while the New York Motor Club is third, with thirteen and one-fifth points against it.

The Westchester lost 323 1-3 points through the withdrawal of one of its team, the Maxwell four-cylinder driven by Fleming. This car broke its propeller shaft when half way over the course. The other twenty-two and two-third points were scored by Lucius Tyler of Boston, who was penalized for the replacement of a front spring. Tyler has been driving like a veteran in this his first national run, and yesterday was unfortunate enough to break a spring. He lost an hour replacing the same and twenty minutes owing to a punctured tire, yet he reached Chicago six minutes ahead of time. It was a great piece of work and demanded excellent judgment in driving.

Thinks Tour is a Race.

The Chicago Club has four two of its members, Vansicklen in the Apperson and Clark in the Packard, the latter being injured yesterday, Vansicklen because he feels that the tour is developing into a race.

The total charges against this organization are 343. The total against the Cleveland Club is unknown, as one of its team was missing at the final checking up last evening. The Shoemaker car was penalized twenty-six points and Roy Chapin, with the Thomas forty, was up against a hard game yesterday. When hardly out of South Bend he broke a spring, but made temporary repairs. Then when within twenty miles of Chicago he lost a spring clip, but found it by going back a distance of ten miles. These were repaired and another start for Chicago was made. Then of course the other spring went and Chapin had to crawl along fifty-one miles late, being penalized one point for each minute late and two points for replacements. His trouble was all spring difficulty, his engine running like clock work throughout. This makes the total penalization of his team, the Detroit Club, 2564½ points.

The A. C. A. has a total penalization of 2358½ points, Mr. Parker withdrawing yesterday morning. There was no change in the standing of the Howe trophy during the day. Fred Dayton, in the Columbia, was another unfortunate, he being given a penalization of 224 points owing to his late arrival at the night control. He had the unpleasant experience of having to replace an inner tube on each of his four wheels. This takes time and is a run such as this, where a time schedule must be lived up to, it is a particularly costly experience.

Good Run from South Bend.

The run from South Bend to this city was the best of the three days, the roads being in excellent condition, except in South Chicago. The route was somewhat lengthened as to mileage but greatly improved as to condition, and there was no kicking. In the main the roads were as good as many of the far-famed roads of Massachusetts. The five miles through South Chicago were quagmires, holes a foot deep being encountered, and cars going deep to the axles. It being impossible for the cars to proceed at a speed greater than mere headway. The cars checked in upon their arrival at the Auditorium and then proceeded to the garage, where the tourists were forced to spend an hour, more or less, in draining them of oil and gasoline.

STAR BIKERS AT REVERE TO-NIGHT

Bursts of speed is on tap at the Revere track to-night when those whirlwinds of the track, Bobbie Walthour, Jimmy Moran and Elmer Collins meet in thirty miles of racing, which is the third event to decide the possessor of the BOSTON AMERICAN diamond medal which is emblematic of the bike racing championship. MacLean, who has already won a couple of legs on the trophy, is out of the race, which will allow one of the three riders to-night to get a hold on the trophy.

The race to-night is divided into three heats of five, ten and fifteen miles, best two out of three to get a claim on the medal.

Collins, the Lynn boy, will be right in his element in the events on the card, as he was a top-notcher in the ranks of the sprinters when he was an amateur and he has shown wonderful sparts since getting into the pacing game.

Walthour has come into his real form which won him the top honors abroad, and popular Bobby is unbeatable when he gets going right.

Jimmy Moran always had a big reputation as a sprinter, and the distances are just right for the Chelsea plugger to demonstrate at express speed from the gun.

Jimmy has been exhibiting some fast stuff on the speedway this season, and is likely to spring a surprise if things break right for him during the evening.

CHANCE TO GET BROCKTON TEAM PICTURE FREE

Have you noticed what that new team from Brockton is doing in the New England League this year? It's making a great showing, championship, and the fans will want to get the full page picture of the boys who are hustling for the pennant in to-morrow's BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN. This team is the wonder of the season, and is getting great support from the fans, who will be falling over each other to-morrow to buy up the edition of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

All along the circuit the fans are after the fine full-page photographs of the New England League team, and the SUNDAY AMERICAN'S reproduction of the Brockton club will be a souvenir eagerly sought after.

Lucky fans. Fortunate Summer stay-at homes. Two ball games for one admission. That's the ticket at the South End Grounds this afternoon. Better get up early if you want a seat, as such a lavish entertainment has not been offered this season on a half holiday.

The games with the Cardinals had to be played and President Dovey, with the co-operation of the St. Louis management, decided to serve up something worth while, in a double-decker, and see if the Hub's fans were appreciative.

There's nothing to it but a run on the grounds. In spite of the St. Louis boys being the tail-end team, they put it on the Giants the other day with a shutout and are likely to do it to any team in the business.

It's a full afternoon of pleasure assured the Hub fans, an event they haven't enjoyed for some time, and the diamond enthusiasm is on the bill to begin at 2 o'clock.

The teams have been held up two days now by the weather and the enforced idleness has put them on edge. They will go to it like jungle citizens starved of their rations.

The first game is the doubtful one to figure out, as Karger, the left hander, who shut out the Giants, and who McGlocklin considers the best pitcher in the league, is coming out to repeat his brush work on the Doves if the latter show signs of doing any lofty tumbling.

Lindaman, who has struck a winning streak, will oppose Karger, and if he can mystify the Cardinals the way he did the Reds, the result is pretty safe. "Cy" Young and Fromme will be coupled.

The teams were already to perform yesterday and fifteen hundred fans were hugging the bleachers when a sharp shower drenched the already soggy grounds, and the jig was up. A couple of incidents before the sport was called off gave evidence that some excitement was on the card, as Dave Brain nearly took the count, having been hit by a stray ball on his coco, and an incipient blaze occurred in the first base bleachers.

To Make a Brutal Man—

Treat a Child BRUTALLY

Copyright, 1907, American-Journal-Examiner

Mrs. Catherine O'Connor writes as follows:

W. R. Hearst:

Dear Sir—Would you please write an article or editorial on "Spare the Rod and Spoil the Child"? It might stop some of this rowdyism. Yours truly,

MRS. CATHERINE O'CONNOR.

Mrs. O'Connor's suggestion, as we understand it, is that we should advocate whipping children to make them refrain from whipping others when they grow up.

We regret to be unable to oblige one of our readers. In our opinion about the most stupid, brutal and harmful of all the dull sayings of an ignorant past is that one, "Spare the rod and spoil the child."

To make a child grow up intelligent, kind-hearted and considerate, you must TREAT IT intelligently, with kindness and consideration.

If you strike your child suddenly in anger, it will strike other human beings in anger, in the same way. If you lose your temper and punish a child BECAUSE YOU ARE ANGRY, that child when grown will be irresponsible and do the same.

The "hoodlums," to whom our reader refers, are not by any means children that were pampered or treated too kindly in their childhood.

The young man lacking in respect for age is one who has not BEEN TAUGHT TO RESPECT AGE WHEN HE WAS A CHILD. The young man acting violently on the street corner is the man who as a child was cuffed and slapped and brutalized.

If parents want their children to grow up with the idea that a blow is an argument, if they want them to be fighting, ill-tempered men, they can't do better than act on that stupid, out-of-date proverb about sparing the rod and spoiling the child.

The human being must be taught to control the body with the mind; to control the temper, the passions, anger, all other emotions, with the mind.

The beginning should come when the child sees in the father and mother self-controlled, careful, calm, admirable and respectable human beings.

A child screaming beneath a father's or a mother's blow is a shameful spectacle. A child waiting in terror and anguish for the beating that has been promised presents a picture of agony that is a disgrace to the parents.

Children that are beaten are made brutal because their sensibilities are dulled. The brutal parent can't expect anything but a brutal man from a brutalized child.

The Best Kind of Writing

It Is That Which EXPRESSES the Simplest Thoughts of Plain, Every-Day People

Copyright, 1907, American-Journal-Examiner

A wise man—Mr. Talbot of the Owls—says: "The sure method of becoming popular is to say the things everybody says."

This saying of Talbot's was evidently intended for sarcasm. But although he may not realize it, Mr. Talbot tells a very interesting and important truth when he says that to "say the things everybody says and think the things everybody thinks" constitute greatness.

As a matter of fact, the most important thing in this world is to help OTHER HUMAN BEINGS TO EXPRESS THEMSELVES.

No man has a monopoly of good thoughts or of great thoughts. But some men have a marvellous faculty for EXPRESSING the thoughts, the emotions, of an ENTIRE RACE.

There was no more ambition in Shakespeare than in any number of humble, ignorant men of his day. Shakespeare was great BECAUSE HE FELT THE AMBITION THAT OTHERS FELT, HE THOUGHT AS OTHERS THOUGHT, AND IN HIS MARVELLOUS DESCRIPTION OF CAESAR HE WAS ABLE TO EXPRESS THE AMBITION THAT OTHERS COULD ONLY FEEL.

The great thing in this world is not any INDIVIDUAL. The great thing is the race. And among the little, unimportant individuals the one called great is he WHO CAN EXPRESS INDIVIDUALLY THE FEELINGS, power, aspirations that constitute the greatness of the human race as a whole.

If you can say what OTHERS are thinking, think as OTHERS think, and give expression to THEIR thoughts, you can be one of the world's great men. YOU CAN NEVER BE GREAT BY YOUR OWN THOUGHTS ALONE.

You see an apple tree with a beautiful apple. That apple is not great of itself. It is simply the expression of the work done by the humble roots, unseen beneath the soil. It expresses the power, resistance to Winter, of the thick trunk, with its life-giving sap. It expresses the vitality in the branches, the sheltering power of the leaves that take in the forces of the sun and air.

The apple is nothing in itself—except THE EXPRESSION of the whole apple tree.

And so what we are pleased to call "the great man," whether he be writer, artist, statesman, thinker, is simply THE EXPRESSION of that great tree—the human race—to which he belongs. The human race is the tree, and the genius is the fruit. He gets his strength from the roots of the tree, the working, humble, unseen masses. He gets his strength from the body of the tree, the collection of strong, working, resisting men.

The great man expresses only his race; he gets his strength FROM the race. He is great, not through INDIVIDUALITY, but through the power of EXPRESSING what the entire race feels.

And you will find in proof of this that the few really great men scattered through history are those that have expressed most admirably the highest point reached by humanity as a whole in their day. Such men are Homer, Aristotle, Bacon, Michael Angelo, Fourier, Beethoven, Shakespeare—the rest are pygmies beside these—and these are great because they gave EXPRESSION to the highest development of humanity in their day.

Little Editorials from the People

"HOW TO BE A CARTOONIST"

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Your advice to a young man in the editorial, "How to be a Cartoonist," in a recent issue, so nearly parallels my case that I felt impelled to write this letter, in the hope that my experience might be of assistance to others of like aspirations. It was always my ambition to become an artist, but my circumstances were such that on leaving school I was obliged to earn my own living and assist in the support of the family. Obtaining a situation as clerk in an insurance office, I devoted all my spare time to drawing, taking up a course as near like that given in the art schools as possible, and making it a rule to draw something every day.

I bought a pocket sketch book, and at every opportunity made rapid sketches from life. This proved to be a great aid to my other work. While thus engaged (for several years), I learned of a vacancy in the art staff of a Boston publishing house, and this position with nearly double my former salary I succeeded in obtaining, somewhat to my own surprise, as I was in competition with a number of others, in which were included some art school graduates.

This present position, however, I regard as only a beginning, and I am studying just as hard in my spare time as before, for it is my ambition to become a newspaper artist.

If you should publish this letter, I would ask you not to use my name, but to sign same simply.

AN ASPIRING YOUNG ARTIST.

Aminidab Dance--Financier

By James J. Montague

AMINIDAB DANCE was a king of finance
Who always was keenly on guard
Lest the legion of clerks in his stock-jobbing works
Should suffer by working too hard.
He would never allow the gruff words
"Do it now!"
To placard his place, if he knew it,
And was wrathful indeed if he happened to read
In his office the legend "Go do it!"

When a crusty cashier who was dourly severe
Once posted the notice: "Get busy!"
He was given the bounce with a jolt and a jounce
That made him amazingly dizzy.
"My motto," cried Dance, "is to give 'em a chance
To soldier when'er they require it;
They can loll at their ease just as much as they please,
As a matter of fact, I desire it."

To protect employes from that mental disease
Whose commonplace title is worry
He billed the whole shop with big signs reading "Stop!"
"Take it easy!" and "What is the hurry?"
"Let it go for to-day!" and "Please ask for more pay!"
Were the words on the desk of each clerk.
And above every stool was the strict office rule,
In great characters, "Don't overwork."

In the small counter tills were large bundles of bills,
So big it would break you to break one,
And before the clerks' eyes, in red type of great size,
Was the brief exhortation: "Do take one!"
In the vaults there were stored stocks and bonds and a hoard
Of gold and promiscuous pelf.
There was never a look at the bold burglar to block,
But instead a gold sign: "HELP YOURSELF!"

Why and Wherefore

The Leaning Tower of Pisa

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Please give a brief description of the Leaning Tower of Pisa, with its height and cost. M. M'DONALD.

Greenpoint.

[The Leaning Tower of Pisa is peculiar, in that it deviates about fourteen feet from the perpendicular, a peculiarity not due to original design. Beginning to keel over at the completion of the third story, the architects deliberately accepted the conditions and, adhering to the inclination, diminished the slope of the upper stories so as to keep the centre of gravity well within the walls. The height of the tower is 180 feet. Its cost, reckoned in American money, was $250,000.]

The Earliest Money.

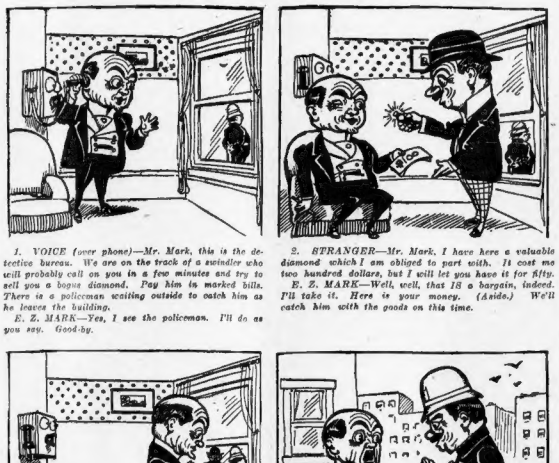
Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

What was the first money used among men, and among what people did it originate? E. T.

[The first standard of value consisted of cattle, pecus, hence the word pecuniary. The earliest coin bore the stamp of an ox or sheep, as, for instance, the "Gold Sheep" and "Gold Lamb" of ancient France. Actual money has been made of various metals, of leather and even of pasteboard. The first coinage of money is ascribed to the Lydians.]

E. Z. MARK PLAYS DETECTIVE

Copyright, 1907, by American-Journal-Examiner



1. VOICE (over phone)—Mr. Mark, this is the detective bureau. We are on the track of a swindler who will probably call on you in a few minutes and try to sell you a bogus diamond. Pay him in marked bills. There is a policeman waiting outside to catch him as he leaves the building.

E. Z. MARK—Yes, I see the policeman. I'll do as you say. Good-by.

2. STRANGER—Mr. Mark, I have here a valuable diamond which I am obliged to part with. It cost me two hundred dollars, but I will let you have it for fifty.

E. Z. MARK—Well, well, that IS a bargain, indeed. I'll take it. Here is your money. (Aside.) We'll catch him with the goods on this time.

3. E. Z. MARK—There he is going out the front door. Won't he be surprised when the policeman nabs him! He thought he was making fifty dollars easy, but he'll soon find out something different. What? He's going right by and the policeman doesn't seem to notice him! I'll have to see about this.

4. E. Z. MARK—Look here, officer, why didn't you arrest that fellow who came out of my office a few minutes ago? You were stationed here especially to catch him, and I'm going to report you for neglecting your duty.

OFFICER—What are you talking about? I wasn't stationed here to catch anybody in particular. This is my regular beat. Somebody must have been stringing you.

Dinkelspiel Has a Tunnel Ride

By George V. Hobart

HOME, LATELY.

MEIN LEIBER LOOEY—Ve haf receifed your letter from Vaterbury, Mass., und ve vas glat to hear it dot your healt' vas enchoying a stationary period of convalesence.

Ve vas all vell at home mit der eggsception dot I vas still planting seeds all day in der garten and suffering all night mit growing pains.

Your mother says it will be fine garten dis Fall, but a lot of strange birds und all of our neighbors' chickens seem to dink it is a pretty goot garten right now.

I vent to New York yesterday to buy some punkin und squash seeds, und I hat to go by der tunnel vich runs from Forty-second street up as far as 110 in der shade.

Undoubtingly you haf been reading in der newspapers, Looey, dot der New York Sentinel railroad und der New Hefton railroad hat determinationed long since to introduction electriesidity und de away mit der steam und smoke und sulphur in der tunnel, but such is a typographical error.

Der steam und smoke und sulphur und darkness und stage fright vas still dare.

Efery time I use dot tunnel, Looey, der eggsperience leaves someding vich looks like der mark of Cain across my forehead.

Dit I efer relation to you, Looey, should der fairst time I vent through dot tunnel?

Dot day vill always remain vun of my hottest memories.

I valked into der car, full mit der choy of living, und bineby after vailing up und down asking many painful questions, I finishingly found a seat next to an olt lady dot vas suffering mit nervous hesitation.

Pretty soon der train broke looss from der station und simontaneously der olt lady began to haf an attack of hesitation for my benefit, because ve hat nefer met before.

"Ach, kind sir," she set, "do you dink der tunnel is safe, yet?"

"Vell, Meddum," I set, "it has der reputation of being someding like a safe, eggscept dot it is open at both ends," but before der olt lady could uncouple my meaning der train had rumbled into der darkness, und she cofered her face mit her hands und refused to be comfortable.

As for me, Looey, somevare between Forty-eighth street und der daylight I lose ten pounds of dis too solid flesh.

Fairst I choked up a leedle und den I coughed und den I stirred uneasilesaily und den I looked oafd der vindow und prayed for der sunlight und den I looked at my newspaper, but I couldn't read it because der railroad company hat found der gas bill pretty heavy last month und dey vas condensing eggspenses.

I looked up at der transfer windows near der roof of der car, und I could see leedle curls of vite smoke cameing in to be company for us, und den I tried to vissle to keep my courage from getting rusty until der olt lady mit der nervous hesitation pulled my sleeve und set it vas bad luck to vissle vile going through a tunnel because it used up too much air, so I became unvissleable.

Den der fooms from der smoke began to rush all ofer der car, daring der peoples to cough, und I got red in der face, und den I changed my mind und got vite in der face.

Den I lost my breath, und ven I got it back again I found it vasn't mine.

Den I began to fan myself mit my hat, but no sooner dit I start someding der olt lady mit der nervous hesitation set I vas a cruel man because efery time I fanned mit der hat I gave her more den her true und chust share of der tunnel gas, in such cases made und provided.

Den I began to choke up und den I coughed, und den I could feel someding gargling in my t'roat, und den my head began to ache itself, und den I began to feel gooss feddars sprouting all ofer my anitomy, but outdside all vas black as ink, und only from der noise could I tell dot der road vas still paying dividends.

Der air began to get close und thick like der head of a tom-cat's stomach, und I vas now breathing like my vife crochets an open-face stocking—vun, two, t'ree, drop vun; two, t'ree, drop vun.

Den my blood began to curdle und der cold chills ran up my back und liked it so vell dey ran down again. My respirations vas 8 to, my inspiration vas 9 to 8 for der place, und my perspiration vas like a cloudburst.

I had made up my vill mit a few mental und inchun reservations, und vas choking up for der last time, ven mit vun mighty chump forvard der train shook itself free from der tunnel und I vunce more ve vas in der sunshine.

I looked at der olt lady mit der nervous hesitation vile she brushed der cinders off her specs so she could look at me.

"Could it be dot such dings as dis eggsist in der land of der brave und der home of der free funch!" she eggsclaimed.

"It ain'd could it, it is it!" I set.

Den ve both began to breathe der free air of Vestchester County und collapsed into silence.

Yours mit luff,

EDINKELSPIEL,
